COVERING THE CAMPUS LIKE A SWARM OF GNATS

Student voting rights in question

As early voting began yesterday, questions involving last week's challenge of Georgia Southern University student voting in the upcoming election to the city of Statesboro are on many minds.

Among the concerns of the challenge are that students are mislead into voting for a candidate for specific issues and true residency status.

909 voters' registration status are to be reviewed by an election board in the near future, before a decision can be made on whether or not these votes will be counted.

Early voting will run through November 2. Regular voting will be on November 6.

Police investigate local shooting

By Will Adams / Executive editor

A 19-year-old man was shot and killed at Jackson's, the club formerly known as Legends, Saturday night at 3787 Old Register Road.

According to Captain L.C. Williams of the Statesboro Police Department, the victim, Julius McReynolds, was a native of Hephzibah, Georgia near Augusta. McReynolds was not a Georgia Southern student.

"We did have a shooting over the weekend at Jackson's, the old Club Legends," said Williams. "A suspect has not been named."

A GSU student, who was present at the time of the shooting, said a fight broke out inside the crowded club just before midnight. Jackson's security then forced those participating in the fight outside into the parking lot.

Patrons of the club were then kept inside for at least an hour, while the fight ensued and shots rang out in the club parking lot.

When the Statesboro Police Department arrived, they discovered McReynolds in the parking lot of Apex, adjacent to Jackson's Club. He was then transported by Bulloch County EMS to the East Georgia Regional Medical Emergency Room where he was pronounced dead.

The medical examiner at the Georgia Bureau of Investigation's Coastal Crime lab determined McReynolds died as a result of a gunshot wound to the upper back. He also suffered bullet wounds in the ankle and leg.

"We are currently investigating this as a homicide and we have no further information at this time," said Williams.

The GSU Police Department, located a few blocks from the club, refused to comment on the incident.

The shooting Saturday night is the fourth occurrence of crime in the past five years at Jackson's.

There have been two incidents of murder; one account of aggravated assault on a GSU basketball player and one person has been injured at the location on Old Register Road, across the street from the RAC.

"On Homecoming there are many people on campus, it's a very mixed group, some were students and obviously some weren't," said Dean of Students Georj Lewis. "It's extremely concerning that these negative events have happened at that establishment."

Anyone with information or present at the time of the shooting is encouraged to contact Statesboro Police Criminal Investigations Division at 912-489-8217 or 912-764-9911.

Haunting in the 'Boro

Elliot Volkman/STAFF

The abandoned meat packing plant off of Packinghouse road is the most notorious haunted place in Statesboro, it is said that on a full moon a gunshot can be heard and the screams of victims accompany it. Every night a ghostly figure of a woman can be seen in the second window from the right side on the third floor as well as shadows escaping from the building. There has been reports of temperature drops behind the building as well.

see HAUNTING page 7

The only thing scarier than what is around these places, is getting arrested for trespassing on them. Each of these areas is considered private property and it is highly suggested that you do not break the law and visit them.

Firefighters look over the scene of a house fire on Sunday, October 28, 2007 in Ocean Isle Beach, North Carolina, where it killed seven college students.

Seven students die in beach house fire

By Jessica Rocha and Jerry Allegood
McClatchy Newspapers

It had been a beach weekend for the South Carolina college students, filled with football, cookouts, late nights and new friends.

Now seven of them are dead, victims of a Sunday morning fire that engulfed a two-story house and allowed just six to escape. The fire, which erupted before 7 a.m., left the house a charred, roofless skeleton.

"There was no part of the house that was not covered with flames," said Stephanie Wilkins, a University of North Carolina junior staying at the house next door. "It was completely, it was just completely covered and engulfed in flames."

The State Bureau of Investigation continued to look into the cause and origin of the fire as of Sunday night.

Officials had not released the victims' names, pending notification of relatives. University of South Carolina officials said six students who died were from the school in Columbia, the Associated Press reported; the seventh attended Clemson University.

The six who survived were also from USC. The home was being used by the owner's daughter and a group of her friends, said Mayor Debbie Smith.

The fire was discovered by newspaper carrier Tim Burns, who said he called 911 after seeing a column of smoke on his route.

"I don't think I've ever felt so helpless because I knew there were people in there," Burns said. The intense heat kept Burns from attempting a rescue, although he said he had to fight to keep several of those who escaped from trying.

Investigators were looking into how many people jumped from the house, said Ocean Isle board member C.D. Blythe. He said one person went into a canal not far from the burning house. Both were among the six that were treated and released from the hospital.

Firefighters arrived within four minutes of receiving the call, and quickly got the fire under control. Perched on stilts, the home sits about two blocks from the beach on one of a series of peninsulas, each tightly packed with houses and connected by canals. Winds blowing flames over the water, and not toward other homes, kept the fire from spreading.

Later Sunday in Columbia, grief counselors and a university chaplain were dispatched to the USC campus' Delta Delta Delta sorority.

A minister at the sorority house declined to comment, as did someone who answered the door at the Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity house.

"These are young people in the prime of their life. They had so much to look forward to, and it's just profoundly tragic," Andrew Sorensen, president of the University of South Carolina, said Sunday night.

How to communicate with the dead

Halloween comes but one night a year. October 31. And as we all know, it's the day where the dead rise from their graves to haunt the living. The most glorified spirits are of course the zombie, the werewolf, the vampire and the ghost: all dead beings who have come back to lurk amongst us on this most terrifying of holidays.

So what better way to welcome the dead than to communicate with them? It's a tradition only the most intuitive people can master, but there have been tales of regular people being able to speak with the dead.

Below are three ways you can try in order to communicate with the deceased:

1. Use an Ouija Board.

This board was created in 1920 by William Fuld and is described as a "doorway to another world." It is a board with a planchette, or movable object, that contains numbers, letters, and the words, Yes, No and goodbye. It takes two people to use it, so make sure you're in the company of your bravest amigo. Also, the board is best when the timing is perfect. So most practitioners use the board at night and with lit candles. After the mood is set, you must decide who is going to question the board, and let them only ask the questions. Once the board is warmed up, you can ask a question to see if any answers appear.

2. Have a séance.

According to Wikipedia.com, a séance's actual definition is an "attempt to communicate with spirits." The word séance is French, and translates to sitting or a session. Séances can be conducted by small groups of people, with participants seated around a table in a dark room. If a medium is present, he or she may go into a trance that theoretically allows the spirits to communicate through his or her body. Other modes of communication may also be attempted, such as the use of Ouija boards. If you don't have a medium, designate one of your friends to take the place of one. Séances also have many myths attached with them, such as the myth of Bloody Mary. This type of séance occurs when you and a few friends go into a bathroom, turn off the lights, and chant the name Bloody Mary four times, and supposedly she will appear. If she appears right away, sources like ghost.org and superstitions.com say she will try and scratch your face off. Another place she might appear is descending on a staircase.

3. Meet with a Medium or Psychic.

Psychics are commonly used in popular culture to refer to the ability to perceive things hidden from traditional senses through means of extra-sensory perception. Mediums are known to be able to communicate to the dead. There are many popular shows and movies based on this sixth sense. Mediums, like Lisa Williams who has her own show on Lifetime and Patricia Arquette's character on NBC's Medium, are able to answer questions you have about someone you loved who is deceased. They will ask you for a memorable item the person has left behind and use that to reach the spirit. Many have skepticism on whether or not these people are factual, but you can only know for certain after you see one. Luckily, there is a psychic right amongst us in Statesboro. Readings by Catherine features local psychic Catherine, who was also on campus last week reading palms for Homecoming. You can visit her at Readings by Catherine, located on 102 Jet Drive or call her at 764-7771.

Communicating with the dead can be a very spiritual, but terrifying experience. So good luck in your endeavors, and happy Halloween!

How not to get arrested on Halloween

Halloween is here once again. It is that time of the year where college students get a chance to embrace all things absurd and obscene. It is a chance for the perfectly sane to act totally insane, and have a good time while doing it.

As is true of most holidays, the easiest way to spoil one is by spending it in a jail cell. It is important for students to remember that although they might think that Halloween is an anything goes time of the year, Statesboro law enforcement officers disagree.

For police officers, Halloween is another day at the job. Kevin Chapman, a bail bondsman for Akins and Saseen Bonding Co. attests to this fact.

"People forget that cops are still out looking for drunk drivers and minors in possession on Halloween," he said.

In his years as a bail bondsman, Kevin has seen people arrested for a number of different reasons on Halloween. He said that the most common are vandalism, trespassing and indecent exposure. These are all easy ways to wind up spending Halloween eating jailhouse ham sandwiches.

The police will be on high alert for these types of activities. Trespassing and vandalism are usually their biggest concerns. Kevin's advice to students who want to avoid dealing with the police on Halloween is simply, "don't go anywhere you wouldn't ordinarily."

This shouldn't be hard for most GSU students. A number of bars in town will be hosting Halloween parties. Dos Primos, for example, is putting on a costume contest.

In theory, it is supposed to be a chance for students to compete over who has the best costume. What it usually turns into, however, is a chance for scantily clad students to show off their assets.

For those students who think that skin is in this Halloween, it is important to remember something. Wearing a revealing Xena the Warrior Princess costume at the bar is one thing. Wearing it at Clyde's Market is something different. The latter is a thing that tends to get the attention of police officers.

Andrew "Jethro" Grant, a senior business major, knows this from similar experience. He chose, one Halloween, to dress up as a certain village person. He soon found out that his loin cloth was not serving its intended purpose. He was then forced to make adjustments.

Kevin Chapman shared a similar example that he experienced one Halloween. He bonded a girl out of jail for indecent exposure. She was arrested because her costume was considered too revealing by the police. Her costume was Eve... yeah, that Eve.

Public nudity is not the only way a student's costume can get him or her into trouble this Halloween. Travis Tuenge, a police officer for the Bulloch County Sheriff's Dept., said that students are often mistaken for criminals because of their costumes. His advice is "if you don't want us (the police) to think you're a burglar, don't dress like one."

Benjamin Wood is a senior journalism major from Lakewood, OH. She is a how-to columnist for the George-Anne Daily.

Of course, the easiest way not to get arrested on Halloween is by not breaking the law. For those students who wish to avoid the temptation to transgress, there are plenty of alternatives to the bar scene.

For example, a live performance of the cult classic the Rocky Horror Picture Show will take place at the Russell Union Ballroom & Theatre at 10 p.m.

Haunted areas around Georgia Southern

Robertson road also known as Old Ghost Road is nearly 10 miles outside of Statesboro, in Brooklet. Old Ghost Road's tale goes back to the days of its bloody past when the area had once been a plantation. The tale speaks of seeing spirits running across the field when it becomes pitch black.

The Holland house, which is currently the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity house, has been noted to be haunted. At night, when taking photos, orbs have been found in them representing spirits. The house had also once been on a plantation.

During the construction of the IT building it has been rumored that one of the construction workers had fell leading to his demise. Late at night the spirit has been seen wandering outside of the building.

In the October 23, 2007 edition of the George-Anne Daily, the front page story titled "The long road home" contained an error. The company is called Southern Destination, not Southern Destinations and the Web site should be www.southerndestination.com. We apologize for the confusion.

GSU students to get help with new passport requirement

By Mandy Wommack

Guest writer

A table will be set up on November 14 in the Russell Union to give students the opportunity to learn about applying for a passport and to encourage students to become globally aware.

"The whole goal is to get people familiar with the passport process and to encourage people to travel," said Matt Walker, a student working for the Center for International Studies. The table will be in place from 10 a.m. - 2 p.m.

A passport is required for anyone to leave and come back to the United States.

Since the new laws passed due to security concerns and border control, you are now required to have a passport to go to Mexico and Canada. Due to these laws, more people are getting passports than before, and the process of applying has become lengthier; sometimes taking around six months.

"If someone applied before Christmas, he or she might get one by spring break," said Joey Newton, a student who works in International Relations and Affairs and who has studied abroad.

If you are over 18, the passport you receive will be good for 10 years.

Through traveling, many students can develop better resumes and have more opportunities.

"Study abroad is one of the best ways to do this," says Darin Van Tassell, assistant professor at the Center for International Studies.

Many companies are offering positions to people from around the world because their business is global.

"Students have got to find a way that distinguishes themselves from other applicants to the same graduate schools, internships, jobs; all things you might want to do after getting an undergraduate degree," he said.

Students gain "a different perspective," said Walker. "With study abroad, students learn subjects but with an international perspective. But traveling in general lets students learn about themselves a lot more."

Students get to experience experimental learning. "It's hard to learn and study about the world if you don't go see the world," said Tassell. "In a world of 6.6 billion people, we'd better learn to move around each other without trampling on each other."

Also traveling expenses can be covered by various scholarships and financial aid such as the International Studies Study Abroad Scholarship, the Zoltan Studies Abroad Scholarship, and the Work and Study Abroad Stipend."

Lady Eagles sweep Catamounts 3-0

GSU News Service

Georgia Southern junior Chrity Dowd posted a match-high 18 kills and freshman Michelle Uzoh had nine kills and no errors to lead the Eagles to a 3-0 (30-26, 30-23, 30-24) victory at Western Carolina Sunday.

GSU improves its record to 9-17 overall and 6-8 in the Southern Conference. WCU falls to 8-21 and 3-11 in the league.

"Today is a great win for us, to come up and play a great Western Carolina team and get a win on the road," said GSU head coach Nicole McCray. "We served and passed well, which I think was the difference in the match."

The Eagles ran off five straight points to break a 7-7 tie in game one to take control. Uzoh began the run with two kills and Dowd picked up where she left off with two more kills.

Western Carolina cut the deficit to one on several occasions, but was never able to tie the score.

Georgia Southern came out firing on all cylinders to start game two, scoring the first five points and eventually leading 13-1. Seven of GSU's points came thanks to WCU errors and another was scored on a service ace. GSU held the Catamounts to a .050 hitting percentage in the second frame, and Dowd and Uzoh combined for eight of the team's 14 kills.

"We definitely served very well in the second game," said McCray. "They could not return the ball which enabled us to block balls and control anything they sent over."

Dowd led the team in kills for the second time in as many matches. She had a .326 hitting percentage and added four aces.

"Christy had a great weekend. Even though we lost on Friday night, she stayed aggressive in the front row and back row, and served and passed well."

Uzoh's nine kills came on a .643 attack percentage. She and Dowd combined for four solo blocks.

"For our M1 to hit .643 and have nine kills in 14 attempts with no errors against a very, very good defensive team in Western means that she's learning and staying patient, and not getting frustrated in difficult situations."

Western Carolina was led by Jelena Jakovjevic, who recorded 17 kills.

Hartley named 'Special Teams Player of the Week' for second time

GSU News Service

For the second time this season, Georgia Southern place kicker Jesse Hartley was named Southern Conference 'Special Teams Player of the Week'. The league office announced the award on Monday.

Hartley, who earned the SoCon and a national 'Player of the Week' honor earlier this month, converted two key field goals and an extra point during Georgia Southern's 21-17 Homecoming win over The Citadel.

The junior converted from 23 and 20 yards out, the team's only points through the first three quarters. He improved to 14-of-18 on field goals this year and 36-of-36 on extra points. Hartley's 14 FGs equal the fourth-highest single-season total in Georgia Southern history, and are the most in a regular season since Reed Haley recorded 15 during the 1993 season. Hartley needs three more to match Tim Foley's single-season record.

Overall Hartley is tied for fourth nationally, averaging 1.8 field goals per game, and 12th scoring 9.8 points per game.

GSU News Service

Georgia Southern senior Kelli Helms was victorious in the C-3 singles flight at the Southern Intercollegiate Championships Sunday afternoon in Columbia, S.C.

The Cairo, Ga. native reeled off two straight wins to claim the championship. It wasn't easy for Helms, as it took a tremendous effort to defeat Joana Tudor of Erskine College 5-7, 6-4, (10-3). She then downed East Carolina's Zandy Overcash in three sets 5-7, 6-4, 6-2 earning the championship.

"This was a great tournament to end our fall season," said coach Amy Bonner. "I am really proud of the way Kelli competed. Her leadership should really help us as we head into our season this spring."

In the C-2 singles division, sophomore Christine Caforio advanced to the championship match by defeating Ali Gores of Davidson College 6-2, 6-4. Caforio then faced Gores' teammate Samantha Galainena where she fell in straight sets 6-3, 6-2.

Freshman Ali Beavers advanced to the second round of the B-3 singles flight by defeating Brooke Walter of East Carolina in three sets 4-6, 7-5, 6-2, before falling to College of Charleston's Keely Mulligan 6-4, 6-2.
