Atlanta rock group Cartel drew the most fans Thursday night, though hip-hop artists Yung Joc and MC Lars stirred up the most crowd participation.

Three major bands pulled in over 400 students and fans when the Crocs Tour made the second stop on their tour at Georgia Southern last Thursday at the RAC.

The tour featured musical acts MC Lars, Cartel and Yung Joc. The first to perform was MC Lars, a California native and an artist comparable to Gym Class Hero's for his punk-rap style. He performed songs off his CD "The Graduate" such as "Download this Song" and "21 Concepts".

Although relatively unknown compared to the other acts of the night, the performance got an exuberant crowd response before the end.

Cartel was next on this line-up. They performed their hit songs "Lose it," "Honestly," and their entire EP "Wasted".

Rap artist Yung Joc ended the show performing several songs including "Coffee Shop," "It's Going Down," and "Juice Box".

Fans were eager to hear their favorite bands play on campus.

"I am really excited to see Yung Joc and Cartel. They come from my home town," said Jessica Dascomg, a GSU student.

Renee Greene agreed.

"I think [Joc] is sexy and his new song is great," Greene said.

Yung Joc's performance and interaction with the crowd led them to dance and rap along with him through most of the show.

During the middle of Yung Joc's performance, one of his bodyguards was escorted out of the show by campus police for an unregistered firearm. No further information was released at the time.

Love, Hope, Strength – an organization created to help Leukemia patients – was also on hand at the event to inform students of the disease and test students for bone marrow

GSU receives top ranking honors

GSU News Service

It seems like Georgia Southern has finally earned its due on the national level. And, we feel, rightly so.

This week, GSU announced that it has been named to the 2009 edition of America's Best Colleges, which is published by the U.S. News and World Report. GSU was listed in the best national university category, which lists only 262 public and private universities.

This has been coming for Georgia Southern. With all the building of programs across the campus, renovations, and Carnegie Doctoral/Research label, Georgia Southern has quickly been climbing in status among national universities.

This is only the beginning for GSU. Now that the national eyes are upon the school, people will start to take notice of the academic and campus growth. Programs such as chemistry, nursing, education, and business are already being recognized on the national level. And programs like information technology, information sciences, and computer sciences are creeping up unexpectedly (to everyone but GSU administration and faculty) among the national rankings.

No longer are the days that this university should be called a place for University of Georgia rejects. This school has built a tremendous reputation of its own and has begun to establish itself as a powerhouse in the state of Georgia.

If you still feel this way, then

Fans of the acts also had a chance to play Rock Band and Guitar Hero on XBOX 360 consoles free of charge. They also had a chance to get free Crocs gear such as t-shirts and merchandise from performers as well as meet the acts as they left the stage.

According to student and fan Terisha Mosely, the show appeared to go off without a hitch from the audience side.

"I love the organization. The show is very organized with its workers and its time" said Terisha Mosely. "I am also excited to have seen Yung Joc. I enjoy his music."

The tour will continue through September 26 and will include notable schools such as Georgia State University, University of Florida, and Ithaca College.

Georgia Southern brings LEGO robotics to local Schools

GSU News Service

The College of Information Technology at Georgia Southern University is sponsoring a LEGO First Tech Challenge (LFTC) team, the Eagle Bots, and has received a $450 rookie team scholarship from The FIRST Foundation.

The scholarship is one of 10 awarded in Georgia. The LFTC is the fastest growing, hottest initiative for teens in the world. CIT invites interested high school students in Bulloch County to contact Professor Robert Cook at 478-0892 or by email at bobcook@georgiasouthern.edu.

Cook is constantly looking for new outreach initiatives for the University. He is a Yamacraw professor and the NASA Space Grant Coordinator for the University.

This year the university will be offering Robotics not only for Computer Science majors, but also as a section in the First Year Experience for Honor Students.

The lab is also used for a four-week science and engineering enrichment experience in the University's Upward Bound program (for high school juniors and seniors).

The equipment from the lab goes on loan to local schools that participate in the LFTC competitions.

Kentucky counties running up tabs with ACLU in Ten Commandments case

McClatchy Newspapers

A long legal fight over courthouse displays of the Ten Commandments could cost two Southern Kentucky counties nearly $400,000.

In a motion filed last week, attorneys with the American Civil Liberties Union of Kentucky requested fees of $390,588 for representing people who challenged the displays in the halls of the county courthouses in Pulaski and McCreary counties, plus $8,133 in expenses.

The request comes after the ACLU won its request for an injunction barring the displays. Congress approved rules decades ago under which the losers in civil-rights cases must pay the legal fees of the winners.

The goal was to make it possible for citizens and attorneys to pursue potentially expensive lawsuits to defend civil rights and uphold constitutional principles when government doesn't do the right thing, said David A. Friedman, the lead attorney for the ACLU on the case.

"It's a core economic principle for how everyone's civil rights and civil liberties can be protected and defended when government acts in a lawless way," Friedman said.

Mathew Staver, the attorney representing the counties, said he will argue that it would be premature to award the ACLU's attorney fees because the case is still pending, and that the amount they've requested is too high.

"It's absurd, in my view," said Staver, founder and chairman of the conservative Christian legal group Liberty Counsel.

The motion from the ACLU, however, said the request was not only reasonable, but conservative. The organization chose to bill primarily only for the 1,283 hours Friedman worked on the case since 1999, and did not include time that most other lawyers spent on the case, according to the motion.

Attorneys bill by the hour. The motion requests an hourly fee of $300 for Friedman; that is well within the range attorneys receive for such work, according to the document.

If the counties do have to pay the ACLU's fees at some point, it's possible insurance would cover the payments.

The lawsuit started in 1999, after local officials posted copies of the Ten Commandments in the courthouses.

The ACLU sued on behalf of residents in each county, arguing that posting the biblical laws violated the First Amendment ban on government endorsement of a particular religious doctrine.

U.S. District Judge Jennifer Coffman ordered the local governments to take down the copies. The counties later put up new displays of the religious laws with other documents such as the Declaration of Independence.

That was an attempt to define the collections as non-religious historical and educational displays, but Coffman ordered the counties to remove the Ten Commandments.

A federal appeals court said putting up the additional documents was a sham to cover the "blatantly religious" motive for putting up the Ten Commandments.

The counties and school system appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court.

A divided high court ruled in 2005 that the displays violated the Constitution, though it left open the possibility that the counties could cure their earlier problems in posting the Ten Commandments and someday put them back on the courthouse wall.

STRANGE BUT TRUE

Men assaulted with sausage, spices in late-night burglary attempt

McClatchy Newspapers

A burglar who broke into a home just east of Fresno rubbed spices over the body of one of two men as they slept in their rooms and then used an 8-inch sausage to whack the other man in the face and head before he ran out the house, Fresno County sheriff's deputies said Saturday.

Lt. Ian Burrimond, describing the crime as one of the strangest he's ever heard of, said a suspect was found hiding in a nearby field a few minutes later and taken into custody on suspicion of residential robbery.

Deputies had no problem linking the suspect to the crime.

"It seems the guy ran out of the house wearing only a T-shirt, boxer shorts and socks, leaving behind his wallet with his ID," Burrimond said.

Arrested was Antonio Vasquez, 22, of Fresno, Calif.

Burrimond said deputies were dispatched to the victims' home in the 300 block of South Thompson Avenue near Kings Canyon Road shortly after 8 a.m. Saturday regarding a burglary in progress.

The victims, told deputies they were awakened by a stranger applying spices to one of the them and striking the other with a sausage.

Both the spices and the sausage, Burrimond said, reportedly were obtained from the victims' kitchen.

After the man fled, the victims discovered the home had been ransacked and that some money was taken, Burrimond said.

Burrimond said the money was recovered, but that the piece of sausage used in the attack was discarded by the suspect and eaten by a dog.

"That's right, the dog ate the weapon," Burrimond said. "I tell you, this was one weird case."

Leave family out of the public's view

Family is something that is crucially important to most people in the world. The devotion we as humans show to our family is a trait of our mammalian nature, as we know of many other animals that show such extreme devotion to family.

Jessica Martin is a senior geology major from Tampa, FL. She is the Opinions Editor for the George-Anne Daily.

We love them, help them, give to them everything we have, including money, time, effort, and even organs.

Last week, when Sarah Palin hit the news circuit as the Republican nominee for Vice President, the news instantly shifted from the candidate and her policies to her family of five children, one of whom is 17 and pregnant.

The media lit up, debating unwed, young mothers and how this would affect Palin's running. The swarm attached itself to this story for days, making it a top story that wouldn't go away.

This is one of the most ridiculous things I have ever seen in politics. This is an example of something I feel should be off-limits.

Leave the family out of it. Politics are no place for what goes on in a candidate's home. I don't care to hear that she has a pregnant seventeen year old. That is not rare anymore. I have known plenty of those in my days. I'm not saying it's right, but for god's sake, let it go.

Family is private. I feel the same way with celebrities in Hollywood. I don't care that Alec Baldwin called his daughter and yelled about how much he hated the girl's mother. That phone call was plastered all over the TV and internet, gaining tons of hits on YouTube. That call should never have hit the press.

If you or I get into an argument with our parents, whose business is it? Would you want your conversation posted all over for the world to see in a matter that has nothing to do with anyone but you and them?

I know as a public figure that your life is under a microscope for the world to see. I agree to a degree with that. I think, at least in politics, that your work and financial records should be under public eye, as watch dog method. But family should not.

When asked about Palin and her family, Democratic nominee Barack Obama said that family should be left out of it. He understands about the family thing, as it is always brought up in the media about how he is bi-racial, with a white mother and black father.

It is a pathetic act of the media and public to have something to find something to have against a candidate or just to have something to talk about. In a world of beating a topic to death, this topic should be left completely out of it.

Family is sacred and is not for the world to view under a microscopic lens.

Raise a finger, just not that one

I am from Gwinnett county, and to be honest, I have seen many men raise a finger or two off of their steering wheels to say hello. So for you to say that because one single person gave you the finger after you "saluted" them sounds very ignorant to me. What you may not know is that perhaps this guy thought you gave him the finger, so he gave you one back. I am not saying that is the right thing to do, but nonetheless it could be what happened. So before you go stating that since people like myself are from a larger city we have "big city attitudes", maybe you should rethink the situation you were in and put yourself in the other person's shoes.

Eagles defeat Austin Peay 34-20

Jared Siri/STAFF

Senior wide receiver Raja Andrews received for a total of 42 yards in the game against Austin Peay.

By Katherine Cox

Staff writer

Saturday night the Eagles tried to bounce back from the loss handed to them from previously ranked number one University of Georgia, against the Governors of Austin Peay State University.

Darrel Pasco, kick returner for the Eagles, got things rolling for GSU with an 11 yard return after Austin Peay won the coin toss.

Antonio Henton got the go ahead to start tonight, and the passing game was solid through the first half, completing five of 9 passes for 49 yards. Switching off, Lee Chapple (14) completed just three of six passes, for 21 yards and was sacked twice.

The rushing game was up and running at the start of the first quarter. Two rushing touchdowns were scored for the Eagles to take a 13-0 lead until late in the second quarter.

A 36 yard complete pass to Raja Andrews from Henton surged the Eagles onto the Austin Peay 4 yard line. Adam Urbano took over the rest of way, punching in a touch down from the 1-yard line to give the Eagles a 6-0 lead.

The point after attempt was failed by Jesse Hartley, bringing his 50 consecutive points made to an end.

The Eagle's defense held strong for the rest of the first quarter and into the second, only faltering near the end to allow the Governors to even it up at half time, 13-13.

After a 12 yard pass to convert a 3rd down attempt, momentum swung to the favor of the Eagles again after a slight lull from the first touchdown. Running back Samair Baker followed up with a 17 yard run.

Fumbles tainted much of the third quarter for GSU.

"At halftime we were just 'out there.' We had no emotion, we were a flat group and they just stuck it to us. We tried reverses, we tried to fake a punt and fumbled when we would have gotten a first down. We just couldn't do anything right," said Hatcher. "And then I challenged them at halftime to come out and play better and then all of the sudden they had a great drive. We didn't do much, but in the fourth quarter our defense really stood up and forced some big turnovers. We then got behind that big offensive line and Henton and those running backs did a great job of running the football and we came out of here with a big win."

APSU came out of the locker rooms ready to go, and jumped out to an early touchdown. Austin Peay quarter back Garry Orr completed an 8-yard pass and the Governors went up 20-13.

The Eagles weren't about to give up yet, though. GSU battled back from miscues and poor ball handling to force Austin Peay to have fumbles of their own.

The Eagles finally caught a break in the 4th quarter and capitalized on the Governors mistakes.

Just after the whistle for the start of the fourth quarter, Markeith Wylie forced a fumble from APSU and J.B. Shippy fell quickly on the ball to recover for GSU.

Henton kept the ball this time for himself, and punched in a 4 yard touchdown. The point after kick would make the score 20-20.

Another keeper from Henton would put the Eagles up 27-20 half way through the 4th quarter, this time after a 16 yard touchdown run.

The Eagles thought they may have sealed the deal with seven minutes left in the game from a pass ruled incomplete by game officials.

GSU cruised to the end of the game, looking stellar while closing out this bout with Austin Peay University.

Henton almost collected his 3rd rushing touchdown of the night, but was stopped short and pushed back 15 yards after another GSU personal foul.

Henton passed for 68 yards, completing 10 of 16 passes and had no sacks. He also rushed for a team high 103 yards.

The fourth and final touchdown for GSU was icing on the cake for the Eagles, and another fumble was forced with two minutes left to drive the win home.

The Eagles finished up with a final score 34-20.

Georgia Southern displayed a solid offensive and defensive showing that impressed and silenced its' doubters.

Chris Covington led the Eagles defense with 11 tackles and one fumble recovery.

The Eagles next home game is Saturday, September 16 against Northeastern University at 6 p.m.
