CIVIL RIGHTS LEADER SPEAKS AT GEORGIA SOUTHERN

Henderson Library nears completion

The Zach S. Henderson Library will turn another page in its chapter on expansion Monday when the renovated building opens to the public at noon.

Governor Sonny Perdue declared a state of emergency for the entire state, allowing various pricing laws to go into effect. According to information from the Board of Regents for it to be placed before the Georgia Legislature.

Several cars waited at the pumps at Murphy USA off of Brannen on Friday after gas prices shot up from the mid-$3 range to approximately $4.19 a gallon overnight. This surge has largely been credited to projected refinery closures expected this week.

Hurricane Ike hikes gasoline prices

Statesboro residents flocked to the gas pumps over the weekend over concerns of fuel shortages as a result of closed refineries in the path of Hurricane Ike.

What they found when they got there though were high prices and long lines at the pump.

A gallon of regular unleaded gas could be purchased for around $3.58 on Thursday night. By Friday afternoon, however, the same gallon of gas was $4.09. The price was even higher on Saturday: $4.19.

On Friday afternoon shortly after 3 p.m., over 20 cars waited to purchase gasoline at Murphy USA on Brannen Street. Later, the same station posted signs informing customers that there was regular unleaded fuel only.

“In another six to seven days, gas prices should be back to normal,” Gregg Laskosi, Managing Director of Public Relations for AAA Auto Club South said on Friday.

According to Laskosi, the average price for a gallon of regular unleaded gasoline in the Savannah area was $3.71 on Friday, up three cents from the day before. "The wholesale price in the Gulf Coast went up significantly," Laskosi said. He added that the price increase was due to these wholesalers having to pass the increased cost to retailers, which are then passed to the consumer.

On Friday, Governor Sonny Perdue declared a state of emergency for the entire state, allowing various pricing laws to go into effect. According to information from the Board of Regents for it to be placed before the Georgia Legislature.

The ground was then broken on the expansion project in June 2004. The addition was built and opened to the public before the original building was closed for renovation. It is this part of the building that will be opening to the public Monday.

Throughout the entire project, books have been stored in the Automated Retrieval Collection and at a warehouse off campus while...

Governor's Office of Consumer Affairs, these measures are taken to prevent price gouging and to protect the economy.

The release also said that violators can be fined between $2,000 and $25,000 per violation of the law.

If a retailer can prove that the "price accurately reflects an increase in the cost of goods or services" they will not be fined.

As of Friday, NYMEX crude oil futures were hovering at $100 a barrel for delivery in October. That's a stark contrast from approximately $150, which was the price of a barrel of oil during the months of June and July.

"Things are very stable," Laskosi said. "If Wall Street and Oil futures traders were concerned, prices would be higher."

Georgiagasprices.com, which relies on user input for local prices, indicates that in the past 48 hours that regular unleaded gas prices range as low as $3.99 all the way up to $4.49.

"Everybody needs to go around conducting business as normal," Laskosi said. "There's no shortage of gasoline."

LIBRARY

various faculty and staff members have been spread across campus. On September 22, all the books and employees will begin to make their return to the library.

"Every department within the library except for access services have moved at least two times," Hamilton said. "The big thing for our employees is that many departments have been out of the building for four and three quarters years."

According to Hamilton, the closeout for construction is scheduled for September 30. All furniture, books and equipment will be in their final places by January of 2009, which is when the entire project will be complete. Also moving to the Library will be the Center for Excellence in Teaching.

Hamilton said that the moves of critical collections will happen the weekend before opening and that everything will be open on Monday. She explained most of the thinking behind the design of the library by saying that libraries are now built for their users and not just the information that they hold.

With the whole building being open on September 22, there will be many noticeable changes for students.

New furniture is abound in the building with more flexibility. The new pieces will include rolling chairs and "crush can" seats.

At the lobby entrance from the pedestrian, any person entering the library will not be able to go through the glass doors past the main staircase to gain entrance to the classrooms there. In order to get to the first floor, you must first enter the second floor.

Hamilton said that the stacks, the books that are readily available on shelf for check out, will still be moving to their new locations during and after the opening on September 22. A-J stacks will be on the 4th floor while K-Z collections will be on the 3rd floor.

"All services and a majority of faculty and staff will be on the 2nd floor," Hamilton said, referring to faculty offices as well as the circulation and reference desks.

Information services, such as government documents, will be on the 1st floor and special collections will be housed on the 4th floor. In the original Henderson Library, there were only eight study rooms available for student use.

According to Hamilton, there are now 29 study rooms with three available for graduate students. Access to study rooms for library users with disabilities will also be available.

The facility will be more than doubling their seating capacity, going from 900 seats to 1900 while also providing more than 300 computer work stations.

Students will also be able to check out projectors to use for small group presentation practices in one of the commons area as well as a practice presentation room on the first floor.

The Lorimer Reading Room, which was open in the original building, has also been restored and will be open to visitors.

According to Hamilton, one of the things that might draw students to the library is the view. With picture windows overlooking Lake Ruby and Wells, there are seating areas that provide an open view to the campus.

"On the fourth floor, there are slanted roofs and balconies that allow visitors to look down on the third floor or see as far as the Nursing/Chemistry Building or the Performing Arts Center.

Hamilton said "I'm every excited and I am looking forward to having our students and faculty to be able to enjoy the facility."

Palin puts gender issues in spotlight

McClatchy News service

John McCain's vice presidential pick, Alaska Gov. Sarah Palin, has given Susan Richards of Charleston, even more to chew over this year. "Palin has made me perk up. Suddenly, I'm a lot more interested in this race," said Richards, an independent who has voted for Republicans and Democrats in past presidential elections. "I like that McCain chose a woman."

Polls last week indicated many women, particularly white women were leaning to Palin.

Those polls found support for Democrat Barack Obama has fallen among white women.

Meanwhile, white female support for McCain has increased since he named Palin his running mate two weeks ago.

As a result, for the first time, McCain had a narrow lead in national presidential polls.

For politicians, winning women voters is crucial; they are more likely to vote than men.

Nationwide, if Palin is able to persuade independent women to vote Republican, that could prove decisive for McCain in November.

She is less likely to be a factor in South Carolina. Even before her selection, polls showed McCain had a solid lead here with about 10 percentage points.

Some think Palin could do even more, reigniting a culture war among S.C. women over such issues as abortion and working mothers.

According to a Winthrop University poll conducted in February, 70 percent of S.C. women think abortion should be allowed in some situations.

Palin's quick return to work just days after giving birth earlier this year also is a turnout to many women, attorney Eleanor Duffy Cleary said.

"Women and men are equal, but that doesn't mean we're the same. We have different roles to play," said Cleary, a Democrat and self-proclaimed feminist who took a year off from work after giving birth.

Search and rescue continues in Texas

McClatchy News service

Hurricane Ike flooded thousands of homes, blew out countless windows and left millions without electricity in Texas and Louisiana Saturday as authorities took to boats and helicopters to help rescue people stranded by the rising water.

The storm claimed at least two lives in Texas after rumbling ashore in Galveston categorized as a 110-mph Category 2 cyclone.

Officials said the death toll could rise in the coming days, and damage cleanup will likely take six months or longer.

The couple chose not to evacuate, thinking the storm would not be as bad as predicted. But they found themselves fleeing to the attic when water rushed into the house and rose seven feet up the walls.

Angie Wright, 49, spent Friday night at a hurricane shelter with her pit bull-boxer mix and tried to return to her Galveston neighborhood Saturday.

She appeared disoriented, wearing socks but no shoes as she waded through floodwater and considered aloud where she would go.

"The unfortunate truth is we're going to have to go in and put our people in the tough situation to save people who did not choose wisely," said Andrew Barlow, a spokesman for Texas Gov. Rick Perry.

Perry mobilized 7,500 National Guard troops and Coast Guard helicopters searched for victims, and Houston Mayor Bill White said firefighters and police officers started responding to emergencies as soon as they came in.

Constitution Day is a reminder of rights

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the government for a redress of grievances—First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

It is the case that as time passes, we tend to put events in the back of our minds, if not forget altogether.

It is hard to judge exactly how the modern age has morphed around this amendment. Abounding are lawsuits involving speech and where the “bounds” of this freedom are. The Internet and its forums have caused a mass of issues involving what is appropriate to leave upon a board. This, in turn, is an expansion of the older debate about what the First Amendment should protect, and what it shouldn’t.

If you have attended Georgia Southern for more than a semester, then you have seen people who advocate views colored by a fundamentalist interpretation of the Bible. Often, students will either walk or drive by these people, ignoring them, talking about them, or even engaging them in verbal combat that sometimes leads into a physical confrontation. In fact, if you were in the area of Landler on Sunday afternoon, you may have encountered such a group.

At times like these, it is easy to wish that these people would simply be quiet, or at least go somewhere else. Having those people on campus, however, should be a comforting symbol of the radical and democratic spirit of the United States Constitution.

Freedom of speech is the bedrock of a true college education. Without it, learning would be severely diluted. The learning we mean here is not the learning that takes place in a classroom. It is the experience that should be occurring every day when you walk across campus and encounter groups of fellow students who may be fighting for a variety of causes. Whether it is campaigning for a particular candidate for political office, or on behalf of the people of Darfur, student groups expose their fellow students to the rest of the world. Without the right to freedom of speech, none of this would ever happen, and a university would be a much duller place.

Not using the First Amendment, for fear of not being heard or for fear of being punished, is as bad as having that right taken away. While discretion is always a wise course of action when making your voice heard, this should never be used as an excuse to simply stay quiet.

Rejoice in the right to speak your mind by doing it everyday. The Founding Fathers, not to mention the greater university community, will thank you for doing it. All the issues and all the people who do not have a voice will also be in your debt. (Constitution Day will be celebrated at GSU on Wednesday, Sept. 17th.)

No matter what class, they are there

We all know them. Most of you probably at least had one in one of your classes. If so, this person might be one of the main reasons why you don’t enjoy or even want to attend said class.

I’m talking, of course, about the guy (or girl) that you so often find in your class, that is more annoying than waiting in line at Chick-fil-A for 20 minutes for a chicken biscuit, only to find out that they stopped serving breakfast two minutes prior.

This person has many names and has existed ever since teachers have taught and young minds gathered in an educational setting. They have been known to be called teacher’s pets, suck ups, good little people, and many other less flattering titles.

It’s that one or more person(s) that throughout a class period, you will hear his or her voice more than you will the professor’s. Some people may confuse this person as a nerd or a brain or maybe just simply the smart kid in class. But I say, nay.

This person isn’t that at all, for the smart person will be the one that seldomly talks and rarely asks questions because they already know the answers.

No, this person I speak of may think that they can be classified by these titles but the truth is that they are too smart for their own good. They talk too much, ask too many questions and make the classroom environment unpleasant for everyone around.

This person most likely doesn’t even know that he or she is being this way. It is just in their nature to be the most annoying people alive. These people are the reason why some dread going to classes. Sure sometimes teachers can be dull, and sometimes lectures can be even duller, but I don’t think there isn’t anyone who isn’t anything worse than that kid.

If you are still clueless to what or whom I’m speaking of, let me do my best to give the stereotypical description of this person.

1. They will most likely always be seated in the front of the classroom and lined up dead center with where the professor stands, if possible.

2. They will constantly interject a lecture with their own insight whether the teacher asked for it or not.

3. At least at one point in the class period, one of the aforementioned interjections will turn into a five to ten minute discussion between that person and the professor (and if your really lucky someone else will interject as well, creating a classroom debate that will quickly turn to a topic totally off base with what the lecture was supposed to be about).

4. Last but not least, they will ask questions, lots and lots of questions. These will be about anything and everything and will often not be relevant at all to the topic. The professor will spend a good 20 minutes of non-productive class time with this person trying to clear up all the instructions about a class or group project. This is while that person sits at a desk with a handout that clearly defines all the directions.

5. If you are still confused about the type of person I am speaking of, just keep your eyes and ears open because they are around. If you do understand but totally disagree with this, then maybe... just maybe, you’re that person.

Parking tickets add up to startling numbers

Every morning at eight thirty, I pull into lot 32 and slowly begin the process of hyping myself up for classes.

As I load my books into my bookbag, I take a moment to scan the parking lot and see just how many unsuspecting students are going to have a nice little surprise from the Parking and Transportation office when they return to their vehicles.

To my surprise, the number is always quite high.

The most common problem I witness deals with students parking in carpool lanes without a proper window decal. Another escalating problem I notice is that students park in my lot illegally.

Since the first day of classes, I wondered how much revenue the Parking and Transportation office made from students and faculty each year on parking violations. At left class Friday, I decided to go back to my apartment and engage myself in some investigative research.

Two hours and a very thin patience later, I found what I was looking for. I had finally found the parking records from the 2005 and 2006 fiscal year (I was unable to find any more recent records).

Upon scanning the page, I hit the jackpot. If I told you that Georgia Southern University issues almost a thousand dollars a day in citations, would you believe me?

If I told you that in 2005 and 2006 the Parking and Transportation department issued 70,166 tickets with fines in excess of 1.2 million dollars, you would probably think I was pulling your leg again, wouldn’t you?

In fact, it is true. It is all true.

Most importantly, it is all public knowledge.

I understand that Georgia Southern needs to make revenue from parking violations and citations, but this number is just too alarming for me to grasp.

Are students really at fault?

I will let you draw your own conclusion to that idea, but my suggestion to all students is this. If you are late for class, park for free at the stadium and take a bus to the main parts of campus.

It is free, easy, to do, and will essentially keep you from becoming upset and complaining to your parents how unfair the world is.

First annual Oksoberfest emphasizes sobriety

By: Quentin Dupree
Guest Writer

Georgia Southern celebrated sobriety through its first Oksoberfest on Thursday.
The event was held at the RAC Pavilion where numerous students were in attendance.
Food, games, music and prizes welcomed the alumni and students who went to the celebration.
Oksoberfest was meant to show GSU students that it is possible to have a great time without the crippling support of alcohol.
Oksoberfest is the brainchild of Joy Hamm, Assistant Dean of Students.
Hamm said “[The best thing about the festival] is that students are learning that they can have fun in a responsible and/or sober way.”
La-Shanda Johnson, the Assistant Director of the Office of Health and Promotion, said “Health Services is proud to be a part of Oksoberfest. When departments collaborate we are able to bring more effective alcohol programming to campus.”

Throught the week, numerous events transpired on campus to add momentum to the debut of Oksoberfest.
On Monday, a D.U.I simulator was presented to the public to show the dangers of drinking and driving.
On Tuesday, there was alcohol awareness noontime trivia and giveaways held at the Russell Union to teach and reward passing students.
The day was finished off with a presentation of the film “When a Man Loves a Woman” in the Russell Union Ballroom.
On Oksoberfest’s eve, students were given an opportunity to hear the words of speaker Mike Green.
All of these events were free of charge and open to anyone who wanted to participate.
On Thursday, students gathered to enjoy Oksoberfest. The music selection ranged from Kanye West to Michael Jackson.
A moonwalk obstacle course along with other games was in constant use.

Civil Rights leader Morris Dees to speak at GSU

Compiled by staff

Georgia Southern University will welcome Morris Dees as its Fall Civic Engagement Speaker on Wednesday, Sept. 24, in the Performing Arts Center at 7 p.m. The speech is free and open to the public.
Morris Dees is a civil rights leader who is the co-founder of the Southern Poverty Law Center.
According to his biography on http://www.splcenter.org/center/history/dees.jsp, Dees was named one of the Ten Outstanding Young Men of America in 1966 by the U.S. Jaycees.
In 1967, Dees began taking controversial cases that were highly unpopular in the white community. He filed suit to stop construction of a white university in an Alabama city that already had a predominantly black state college.
In 1969, he filed suit to integrate the all-white Montgomery YMCA. Out of his commitment, he established the Southern Poverty Law Center.
The SPLC is a non-profit group specializing in lawsuits involving civil rights violations, domestic terrorism, and hate-motivated crimes.
Dees will present his lecture “With Justice for All” in which he discusses how a commitment to justice for all will chart our nation’s future as America becomes more diverse and economic disparity widens.
Dees will share his experiences and insights, explaining how and why he sold a lucrative publishing business to become an attorney and then founded the Southern Poverty Law Center.
Dees will also discuss hate crimes across the country and the need for the teaching of tolerance, love, and respect for one another.

Political comedians Capital Steps come to GSU

By: Will Douberly
Guest writer

On September 16 at the Performing Arts Center, many of the biggest names in the political arena will be targets for humorous verbal barrage.

At 7:30 p.m. on Tuesday, a group by the name of the Capitol Steps will be performing its satirical comedy that focuses on the trivial matters that are often prevalent in the United States' government.

This will be the second appearance by the Capitol Steps at Georgia Southern; the group first performed here during the 2006-2007 school year.

According to the Capitol Steps' official Web site, they have been performing for over 25 years.

They also have 28 records under their belt, including their newest hit, "Campaign and Suffering."

The group members are former Senate staffers, whom, according to their website, set out to poke fun at the very people who employed them.

They have also appeared on "Entertainment Tonight," "Nightline," and "20/20."

PAC Assistant Director Carol Thompson said that potential audience members should not fear an unfair bias against any particular political party; anyone and everyone is fair game.

Perhaps the only group who should anticipate cringing with discomfort is the politicians who are sitting in the crosshairs.

Thompson also mentioned that the Capitol Steps have broad appeal and their shows are appreciated by both the older and younger demographic.

In addition to appealing to a wide range of audiences, the group is known to be notoriously quick in implementing breaking news stories, as well as political news, into the act.

Anyone looking for intelligent entertainment need not look further than the Capitol Steps, who put the mock back in democracy.

Eagles win in overtime 34-27

By Thom Cunningham
Staff writer

The Georgia Southern Eagles (2-1) defeated the Northeastern Huskies (0-2) in a comeback effort in overtime Saturday night.

Tim Camp recovered a fumble in the first quarter and took it to the end zone for the Eagles' first score.

Two minutes after Northeastern scored their second touchdown, Ohio State transfer Antonio Henton ran the ball one-yard and tied the score 14-14.

"We just had to make big plays," said Henton. "We have a lot of trust on this team starting with the offensive line. You just have to go with the play and trust that your teammates will be there ready to go."

Another five-yard rushing touchdown by Henton narrowed the lead for Northeastern, making the score 24-21.

Both teams were shutout for most of the fourth quarter, while the Huskies had a 27-21 lead on GSU. With less than 2 minutes left in the game, Northeastern fumbled the ball away to GSU inside the Eagles' 30 yard line.

With 1:01 remaining, Henton threw a laser across the middle of the field to Tim Camp for a 65-yard touchdown.

"We all knew what was at stake during this time," said Henton. "We had to step up and make a play. There was no doubt in our minds that we could win and I thought we played great composure."

The Eagles started on offense to begin overtime. GSU struck with a 25-yard touchdown run by Antonio Henton.

"That was the point in the game that the leaders needed to step up," said senior receiver Raja Andrews.

GSU defense didn't allow the Huskies to convert on a fourth down situation, which resulted in the comeback victory for the Eagles.

The Eagles begin conference play Saturday when they host Elon at 7:00.

Eagles volleyball dominate UNC Wilmington and Charleston Southern

By David Williams
Staff writer

Georgia Southern volleyball hit .297 and .223 respectively against UNC Wilmington and Charleston Southern as they swept both teams 3-0 Friday Sep. 12 at Hanner Fieldhouse for the 'Bash in the Boro.'

GSU improved their record to 5-4 with both victories and ended a three-match losing streak in the process. They have now won both matches in the 'Bash in the Boro' tournament.

GSU held the UNCW Seahawks to a low .086 attack percentage. They also racked up 13 blocks as a team. Michelle Uzoh led the way with eight.

Offensively, freshman Bethany Sanford, led the Eagles with 11 kills and added 12 digs for another double-double. Uzoh also added six kills. In total, nine players tallied at least one kill.

Later that evening, GSU continued its drive, sweeping Charleston Southern 3-0 (25-19, 25-14, 25-19).

I thought that it was a good effort. I thought we came out and established ourselves early, and that is what we had been talking about doing," said GSU head coach Chad Callihan. "We wanted to make an impact in the first 10 points of the game and set the tone for the match, and I thought we did a good job with that."

"We did a good job blocking. We did a better job of just picking up our hitters early so there wasn't much guesswork," said Callihan. "Everyone had a nice feel for what their players were going to do. We have been trying to shade ahead of hitters early, and it's starting to benefit us."

"I thought we did really well. We tried really hard to stay focused, and if we made a mistake we tried to just shake it off and come back stronger," said Sanford after the match against Charleston Southern.
