Board of Regents postpones plan to shut down GIL Express

Cooperative research system to be shut down today due to budget cuts, averted by protests

By Denver Pittman
and Chris Buchanan

Following statewide protest, the University System of Georgia (USG) decided to postpone initial plans to suspend GIL Express. The initial suspension was supposed to go into effect today.

GIL Express is a system-wide resource network that provides opportunity for the distribution of book loans and research materials throughout the system.

After hearing about the cut, history students, both graduate and undergraduate, took action. Both the History Club and Phi Alpha Theta had planned to aid in the organization of the graduate student response. History departments state-wide had also participated in protesting activities.

"In just three days, students could receive any book in the system," said Jonathan Bryant, History Professor and Director of Graduate Studies at Georgia Southern University.

Without this program, students and faculty would have been waiting for up to two weeks on the national interlibrary loan service to deliver the books.

According to GILExpress.USG.edu, the decision was a direct response to concerns brought to the USG by students, faculty, and administrators who saw a potential negative impact by suspending the service.

While the postponement will only last until the end of the semester, the GIL Express site states that plans are being made to continue the system in some form in the future.

Graduate students have used GIL as a safe haven for research for several years. As of October 1, however, the state's library system had made initial plans to suspend the on-line retrieval system after Governor Sonny Perdue announced budget cuts in several state government agencies.

Had the plan to suspend the service gone through, students would still be able to access books through the

Special Olympics to hold Georgia games at Mill Creek this weekend

By Shannon Knepp

Assistant news editor

The Georgia Special Olympics are coming to Statesboro. This weekend, representatives from across Georgia will be coming to Statesboro to compete in their favorite sports.

The Special Olympics will be held October 3-5 at Mill Creek Park. Volunteers are welcome and appreciated. Some of this weekend's sports include Bocce, cycling, long distance walking and running, softball, and golf. This will be Statesboro's first time hosting the Fall Games.

According to specialolympicsga.org, over 1,000 people will be competing in the Fall Games this year. The SOGA is an organization run by volunteers. Through SOGA, 22,797 athletes get to compete, however, this is only reaching 23 percent of those who are able to compete.

Tera Torbert, who is a special education teacher for students with moderate and severe disabilities, will be one of the volunteer coaches helping with this weekend's events. Torbert and her husband, Travis, who is the delegation head for the Special Olympics, are bringing three teams from Colquitt County. They will be bringing two Bocce teams, one made up of strictly disabled children and the other will be made up of a mixture of disabled and non-disabled students. They will also be bringing a softball team to the Special Olympics.

This will be the Torberts' sixth year volunteering for the Special Olympics. When asked what kept her coming back, Torbert answered, "You get a lot of rewards out of it. The kids just have a great time."

Due to the event, the hotels in Statesboro are filled to the brim with

STRANGE BUT TRUE

McClatchy News Service

There's been no shortage of takeoffs on Sarah Palin lately, from television skits to action figures, but Bruce Elliott has gone one step further than most.

He has taken off her clothes.

Elliott, whose wife, Tobin Mitchen, owns the Old Town Ale House in Chicago, painted a nude portrait of the Republican vice presidential nominee and hung it above the bar, where it's now a prime attraction among his display of more than 200 celebrity portraits and other racy art.

Palin became Elliott's muse after he saw her on TV.

"I've been following her religiously," he said Monday at the bar. "I had never heard of her before, like everyone else. I find her bizarrely fascinating, even though I pretty much despise everything she stands for."

Despite their political differences, Elliott admits to a bit of a crush on the Alaska governor.

He began painting her smile and trademark glasses, he said, before filling in the details: a gun, red high heels, polar bear rug, rugged Alaska landscape and a scared moose.

His daughter, who looks a little like Palin and does a great impression of her, served as model for the governor's body.

Since Elliott, 68, hung the portrait Thursday, it has been a steady draw at the dive bar, which is a popular spot for Second City comedians to grab beers and play pinball after shows. But after the image hit the Internet on Monday, interest exploded.

"We got a bunch of people in tonight," Elliott said. "They're coming to take pictures with their camera phones. The photo is all over the place."

system without the on-line element, but they would have to actually drive to the individual USG libraries to pick them up.

Bryant said that this would not have been enough for graduate students.

"Our library, with its 600,000 books is simply not sufficient," said Bryant.

Other professors feel the same way. "The way scientists need laboratories, historians need books," said Anastasia Sims, professor of history, who designed her American women's history class around the expedient availability of texts through GIL.

The nearest USG school to GSU, Armstrong Atlantic University, is approximately 55 miles away according to MapQuest.com.

No word has been released on the fate of the Galileo database that was set to be canceled this year as part of the same case.

According to Dean of the Library Bede Mitchell, Cambridge Scientific Abstract was dropped from the list.

"There are a number of databases in it that people might use," he said singling out the Sociological Abstracts Database as the greatest loss incurred from the drop.

Mitchell said that to help remedy the problem of the missing database, the library would cancel 12 to 15 print subscriptions to titles which the library already has electronic editions.

"What we're going to do is we're going to eliminate the print subscriptions and with money that we save we'll be able to pick up subscriptions to the sociological abstracts," he said.

Mitchell said that the decision to cancel print subscriptions was not taken lightly since the electronic editions can sometimes be unreliable if the owner decides to cancel service with Galileo.

reservations. The Days Inn, Trellis Garden Inn, Holiday Inn, and Quality Inn are all almost booked solid for the weekend.

Manager of the Trellis Garden Inn, Sylvia Brown said that the Special Olympics coming to town is a big deal. According to Brown, "[the Special Olympics has probably] filled up about 90 percent of hotels. All the hotels should be about booked." The Trellis Garden inn is full this weekend.

It isn't just the small hotels that are feeling the impact of this weekend either. The Quality Inn of Statesboro is booked for the weekend as well. According to Michelle Monteiro of the Quality Inn, they are nearly full from the Special Olympics. "And those rooms that are left will be booked with families," Monteiro said.

However, it isn't just about the money. "It's a really big deal," Brown said. "We're proud to host them."

NATIONAL NEWS

Another Great Depression not in sight

McClatchy News Service

Hearing some of the dire predictions for an economy struggling to avert a financial collapse, it's easy to recall 1930s photos of people huddled in soup lines or traveling the country for work, and wonder what a depression would look like in the modern world.

Yes, there is genuine concern that, regardless of the government's $700 billion bailout proposal, the United States still could land in a severe recession.

But economists insist it is not another Depression.

But despite the alarms, including dire warnings from President Bush, economists insist there is no risk of a second Great Depression because, for some time now, the U.S. economy has been in the midst of a very different, less-threatening phenomenon: "the Great Moderation."

Coined by a Harvard economist earlier this decade, the term refers to a U.S. economy shaped by more flexibility and far less volatile swings in growth.

That flexibility, fueled by everything from financial deregulation and global trade to the shift toward a service economy, will keep the nation from sinking into a depression.

"The Great Depression should not be the reference point," said Erik Hurst, an economics professor at the University of Chicago's Graduate School of Business.

"When (Bush) says 'there goes the economy,' that doesn't mean one in four of us will be out of work. It means we're going to have a recession. There could be a drag on U.S. productivity for four to five years. We may get 1 or two years with little or no growth," Hurst said.

Is there any possibility of repeating a period in history when the nation's jobless rate reached 25 percent and economic output fell by one-third, as it did during the Depression?

"Zero, just zero," said Kenneth Rogoff, a Harvard University economics professor. "Ten percent, that could happen. If we got to 10 percent, that would be pretty spectacular for the U.S. But it would take a lot of mistakes (by Congress) for a long time."

James Galbraith, a University of Texas economist and son of the late, well-known economist John Kenneth Galbraith, calls the possibility of another Great Depression "overheated rhetoric" because the federal government plays a far larger role in the economy than it did during the 1920s and 1930s.

House responds to rejection of bailout

McClatchy News Service

Almost until the early afternoon vote Monday on the financial rescue plan, voters bombarded congressional offices, protesting almost in unison: Don't bail out renegade financial executives and companies.

On Monday, House members, who face the voters in five weeks, listened to their constituents rather than their party leaders and rejected the $700 billion financial rescue package.

For many, it was just too much to swallow too quickly, and too hard to explain.

Most House members said, "I want this thing to pass, but I want you to vote for it, not me," explained Rep. Paul Ryan, R-Wis., who voted for the bill.

The 228 votes against the plan included 95 Democrats and 133 Republicans.

Conservatives saw too much government interference in free markets and too high a price tag; liberals thought it provided too much help for Wall Street and not enough for distressed homeowners.

"There's a real sense of frustration. People see their tax dollars spent bailing out financial institutions, and they themselves are not doing well," said Rep. Elijah Cummings, D-Md., who represents a predominantly black Baltimore district.

He voted no.

From the opposite end of the political spectrum came conservatives such as Rep. Jeb Hensarling, R-Texas.

"This Congress, in a rushed effort to provide stability to a troubled credit market, did not adequately discuss or investigate potential alternatives that would have constituted a workout and not a bailout," he said.

Hensarling, Cummings and others had pleaded with their leaders to give them a bill they could explain easily back home.

Constituents wanted Congress to act, they said, but were suspicious of what they might do.

Instead, many members found the compromise that emerged to be too complex, fueling constituents' qualms.

Most lawmakers knew that what had happened was something much more fundamental.

"This is the same politics of fear we are healing from the fat cat financial bullies from Wall Street," said Rep. Ted Poe, R-Texas, who voted no.

COLUMN

Uncle Tom will have to wait

All our lives, we have been taught the importance of reading. They teach you about the importance of reading, the importance of imagination, of learning about other cultures, worlds, lives.

I love to read. A good book in my hands and a comfy couch or chair and I am as happy as a clam.

Jessica Martin
is a senior geology major from Tampa, FL. She is the Opinions Editor for the George-Anne Daily.

My mind races over the pages, my emotions stirred. The feeling of the pages in my hands make me forget about my contacts drying out because I can't take my eyes off the words. I find myself lost in a bookstore, forcing myself to not buy the amount of books I want to pick up.

So how come I can't read anymore?

I have no time to read. No one does. I remember a discussion on my geology fieldtrip this weekend about books. A group was sitting in the van, looking back on Dan Brown's Angels and Demons, which was agreed upon as equal, if not better than The DaVinci Code. We talked about the suspense, the characters, the amount of research it must have taken him to be able to write it. We laughed about how none of us could put the book down.

But the smiles disappeared when one person commented on not being able to read for leisure when school was in session.

I have had this same discussion with many of my friends from all different majors. It just seems like no one has time for reading, with class assignments and textbook assignments, as well as jobs and meetings, etc.

I haven't been able to pick up a book in months. I often spend my summers cramming in as many books as I can. I love the classics, books that have been passed down in our culture as important novels from generation to generation. Such books include Red Badge of Courage, Frankenstein, Huck Finn, Pride and Prejudice, Dracula, Les Miserables, etc.

This summer I began a book I have been dying to read, Uncle Tom's Cabin. It is currently sitting on my floor, a folded sticky note marking Chapter five. It hasn't moved since I returned to my apartment in August.

The only book I have read since this semester has begun is a book I was assigned for one of my classes. I really enjoyed the novel and lucked out in the fact that the subject matter is something that really interested me.

But the fun and leisure of reading the book was destroyed by an assignment deadline and the packing of schoolwork surrounding my crazy busyweek, on the Monday of which the project was due.

It just saddens me that the thing that was pressed as so important in our youth is pushed aside in our adulthood. It bothers me that once we have matured enough to feel the love of books and where they take us, what they make us feel, that we have to put them down.

I understand that we are in college to receive an education. We do read a lot, with papers, published reports, and textbooks. But can we not read something of our own, have a chance to relax and learn something not involving a book written by a professor for use in a class?

I remember my parents telling me that this happened to them when they went to college. That I would have plenty of time once I graduate and got a job, of course.

I guess Uncle Tom will have to wait until then.

Submission of Letters to the Editor

The George-Anne Daily welcomes letters to the editor, story submissions and guest columns. Professor makes news

Reksulak featured in Savannah Morning News

By Sarah Goodwin
Guest Writer

Dr. Michael Reksulak does not only teach students here at Georgia Southern, but also extends his knowledge outside of the classroom to the readers of the Savannah Morning News.

Reksulak, who is an assistant professor of economics and public finance in the College of Business Administration, is also a current investigative writer for the Morning News, reporting on exchange and more specifically, free enterprise.

In one of his most recent articles, "Captured Regulators Caught", which was published in the Morning News, revealed some recent findings concerning a lack of regulation controls in the Mineral Management Service of the United States government.

In his article, Reksulak discussed the agencies $4 billion a year Royalty in Kind (RIK) program for this agency and its unregulated and unlawful behavior.

Reksulak found information in recent investigations that proved regulators of MRS' RIK were discovered to have been engaging in many illegal and immoral business practices with the employees of well known oil and gas companies.

According to the article, for the years of 2002 to 2006, they find that approximately one-third of RIK's staff had received gifts and money from these companies.

The investigations also show that RIK employees were conducting in sexual activity, illegal drug use (specifically the use of cocaine and marijuana), as well as the consumption of alcohol at the industry events with oil and gas company representatives.

"New leadership at the Department of the Interior, thankfully, has just released a statement promising to clean up their act at the Management Service," said Reksulak, about his article in a previous interview.

Reksulak writes controversial stories, informing citizens of activities occurring in the government that are not widely known.

In another recent article, "The Goldilocks fallacy," Reksulak discusses President Bush's speech regarding his administration's recent proposal for bailout of the now failing economy.

Reksulak attacks the Bush administration's plan to curb the impending economic slump and points to many flaws in the proposal.

According to the article, Reksulak also points to the fact that the bailout plan could possibly lead to a bigger economic recession, and cost taxpayers more of their hard-earned money.

For a complete list of Reksulak's articles, visit his Georgia Southern personal website at <http://personal.georgiasouthern.edu/~mreksula/>

Dr. Reksulak was not available for comment at this time.

Georgia Southern partners with Pearson Foundation to host summit

Compiled by staff

Georgia Southern students are encouraged to think globally and locally at the University's first Student Sustainability Summit October 23-25.

The summit, which partners Georgia Southern and the Pearson Foundation, is the first of its kind and will be a model for future summits across the country, according to Lissa Leege, director of the Office of Sustainability in the Allen E. Paulson College of Science and Technology.

The Pearson Foundation, the philanthropic arm of the Pearson PLC media company, chose Georgia Southern because of the universities strive to a more green campus and lifestyle.

"Georgia Southern has a strong environmental science program, and the entire campus community is making a commitment to reduce its environmental impact through sustainability," Leege said.

"The Pearson Foundation considered Georgia Southern a great choice to host the summit since its students and faculty are so knowledgeable on sustainability issues."

The entire summit is free of charge, but to ensure a spot, registration prior to the event is encouraged and required.

There is very limited space, so students who wish to participate in this year's summit are asked to register as soon as they can.

The applications are due October 7, so if you are interested in registering please visit the Pearson Foundation web site, www.pearsonfoundation.org/sustainability.

The summit will encompass three days, and will begin on Thursday, October 23.

The summit will kick off with a keynote address by filmmaker Eric Flagg, which will take place at 7:30 p.m. at the Nessmith-Lane Continuing Education Building.

Flagg will screen his award-winning film 'Gimme Green.'

According to the 'Gimme Green' web site, the making of the movie involved a journey through Florida, Georgia, Washington D.C New York, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Maryland, New Mexico, Arizona, Nevada, and California.

The 'Gimme Green' web site also states that the film, which is a look at America's obsession with the lawn, analyzes the subdivisions of Florida to the sod farms in the southwest and expose how the lawn industry is a $40 billion one.

The summit then continues on Friday, October 24, and will include one of two action tracks students can participate in.

Students can think globally and create an environmental film or a public service announcement.

Students who choose to "think global" will work with Eric Flagg and the Pearson Digital Arts Alliance to plan, shoot and edit a short film on the environmental topic of their choice.

According to the Pearson Foundation web site, for the students who are interested in thinking locally can participate in a range of community events, including Ogeechee River cleanup.

The students will leave the summit with their videos, to share with others to make change.

"The students will have these films for the rest of their lives for educational purposes, so this could have a far-reaching impact," Leege said.

"It's a very creative way to spread information far and wide about sustainability issues."

The students who opt to "act local" will participate in an Ogeechee River cleanup on Friday and a Sustainability Fair in downtown Statesboro on Saturday morning.

They will design a sustainability action plan to advise Statesboro City Hall, Copper Beech Apartments, the Town of Register and a local homeowner on creative solutions to reduce their ecological footprints.

The students will team with Thatcher Young, an expert from the Department of Natural Resources; to identify ways these groups can become more energy, water and waste efficient.

The students will continue working on their projects on Saturday, October 25.

The summit concludes that night with a celebration at the Nessmith-Lane Building, where the students will show their films and unveil what their plans are for improving our environment.

Student Alliance for a Green Earth (SAGE) will be having their first meeting of the year on Wednesday September 3, 2008 at 5:00p.m. in Russell Union Room 2048.

How would you like to adopt an international student? Georgia Southern has over 300 international students on campus who would love to have an adopted family to show him/her what American family life is like. This just means that the student spends time with you and your family by going to the movies, shopping, out to dinner, or cooking a meal together, etc. If you are interested in becoming a "host" family for an international student at Georgia Southern, please contact Trang Ta at 478-7968 or email ttal-gw@georgiasouthern.edu. The Center for International Studies is located at Forest Drive Bldg, Ste. 1313.

GSU Men's Basketball is looking for volunteer student managers. Position requires self-discipline, time management and strong work ethic. Great resume and contact builder. Opportunity to advance into paid position in future. Contact Coach Podell at ep00256@georgiasouthern.edu or 732-904-7470.

Have you ever wanted to learn more about the Catholic faith or thought about becoming Catholic? If so, you are invited to attend RCIA (Rite of Christian Initiation of Adults) classes at St. Matthew Church (Gentilly Road). For more information, please call 681-6726.

Women's Soccer Falls in Overtime

GSU news service

The Georgia Southern Women's Soccer Team lost to Furman in overtime 4-3 Sunday afternoon in Greenville, S.C.

The Lady Eagles fall to 3-4-2 (1-1-0) and Furman advances to 7-3-1 (1-1-0) after today's match.

Georgia Southern held the Paladins scoreless in the first half of play.

Sophomore Michelle Berard gave Georgia Southern an opportunity to score in the first half when she took a shot on goal, but Briana Da Mota was able to make a save preventing the goal.

Furman scored two quick goals to start the second half. The Lady Eagles responded and tied the match up by scoring two goals in a span of eight minutes.

Freshman Danae Kaimuloo scored the first goal in the 58th minute by taking advantage of a 2 on 1 breakaway opportunity.

Senior Ashley Toussaint picked up the assist on Kaimuloo's goal. Toussaint tied the match at 2-2 in the 66th minute of action when she scored on a breakaway and placed the ball into the left side of the net past the goalkeeper.

Kaimuloo scored her third goal of the season off a pass from Caroline Rutledge and gave the Lady Eagles a 3-2 lead.

Furman tied the match at 3-3 in the 85th minute of play. Lucy Martin scored from 23 yards out to send the match to overtime.

Alexa Jones knocked in the game-winning goal in the 94th minute of the match to give the Paladins a 4-3 win over the Lady Eagles.

The Lady Eagles return to action Friday against Chattanooga at 4 pm at Eagle Field.
