COVERING THE CAMPUS LIKE A SWARM OF GNATS

Robberies reported near campus

By Rachael Cason

Staff writer

Recently, robberies have been increasing in number both on and around campus. The most recent happened in the early morning hours of Oct. 28.

A black male approached a young man outside Campus Crossing, according to police witnesses. The thief had a gun and took the victim's wallet before fleeing the scene.

On Oct. 20, two black males, one sporting a goatee, and one white male broke into an apartment in the Pointe at Southern. They entered the apartment and took approximately $400 in cash from the victim.

Captain Scott Brunson of the Statesboro Police Department said that, while there have been no new arrests in the case, they are working on a new lead in the case regarding the Pointe at Southern.

Brunson thinks that the victim opened the apartment door upon hearing knocking, thinking it was a friend playing a joke. Once the door was slightly ajar, the robbers were able to force their way inside, one of them brandishing what police believe to be a semi-automatic weapon.

Two named in College of Education dean search

By Charles Minshew

Editor-in-chief

Two candidates have been named in the search for the next dean of the College of Education.

Thomas Koballa and Steve McCallum have been chosen to participate in on-campus interviews that are set to take place in November.

According to Dean of the Library Bede Mitchell, who is the search chair, Koballa and McCallum are the only two candidates scheduled for interviews at this time.

Mitchell said that once the finalists have visited, Provost Gary Means will determine whether more candidates should be selected or if an offer should be made.

According to the interview schedule, new President Brooks Keel will participate in a phone conversation with each of the candidates.

Open forums will also be held for each candidate. Koballa's forum will take place on Monday, Nov. 9 from

Georgia Southern University Police, clarified that the robbery that took place at the Pointe at Southern was not the robbery of a student.

The victim was a residence worker who is also a tenant.

This would mean, according to McCullough, that this was probably not a random break-in. Rather, the thieves likely knew that this was a worker's residence, and they probably also knew that there was money to in the residence.

McCullough said that they have been increasing patrols around the campus as a means of preventing these types of incidents.

However, she also said that there are things students can do to safeguard themselves.

First and foremost, she said to not go anywhere alone at night. The robbers are targeting independent students and seem to be leaving groups alone.

Additionally, she said not to cut through the woods, to stay in well-lit areas.

McCullough also suggested staying away from alleys or shrubbery areas where people could hide.

Finally, she said should something happen, for students to follow the demands of the thieves.

She reminded everyone that it is much better to be burglarized than to lose one's life.

Campus alerts are issued at the discretion of the university police when it comes to things not occurring within campus.

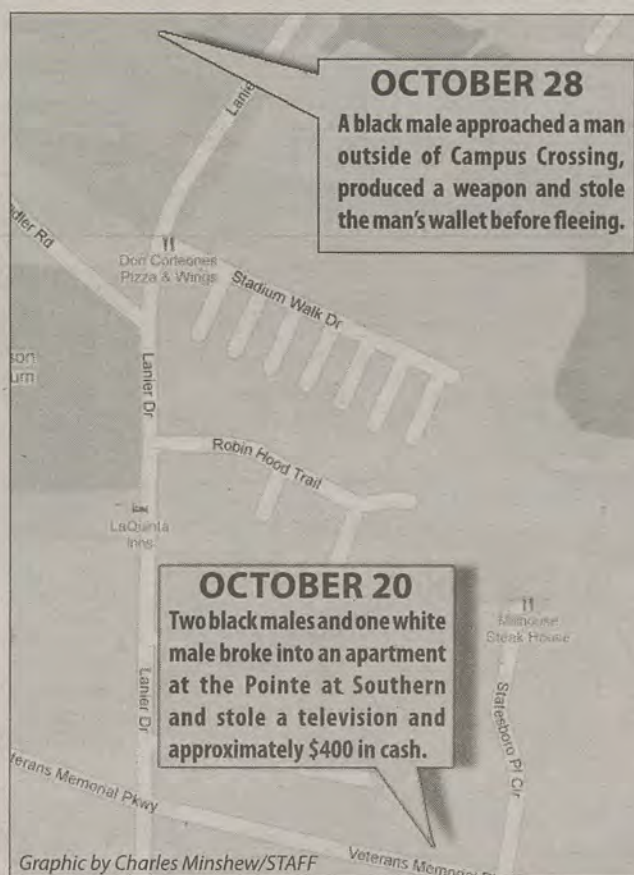

Because the Pointe at Southern is so near to campus and is known to house several GSU students, university police opted to issue an Eagle Alert regarding the burglary.

Brunson said that a "substantial monetary reward" is being offered to any information that leads to an arrest in the case.

Anyone with information is asked to call Brunson directly at (912) 212-2301 or to contact GSU police at (912) 478-5234.

Brunson assured all calls will be kept confidential.

STATEMENT OF OPERATIONS

The George-Anne is the official student newspaper of Georgia Southern University, owned and operated by GSU students using facilities provided by the university. The newspaper is the oldest continuously published newspaper in Bulloch County and Statesboro, Ga. The newspaper is a designated public forum for the Georgia Southern community. Opinions expressed herein are those of the student writers and editors and DO NOT necessarily reflect those of the faculty, staff or administration of GSU, the Student Media Advisory Board or the University System of Georgia. The newspaper is published twice weekly, on Tuesdays and Thursdays, during most of the academic year. Any questions regarding content should be directed to the student editor by phone at 912.478.5246 or at gaeditor@georgiasouthern.edu. Readers may access the newspaper and its archives at www.gadaily.com.

ADVERTISING: The newspaper accepts advertising as a community service to help defray publication costs. Inquiries should be directed to the ADS or PAGES, P.O. Box 8001, Georgia Southern University, or by calling 912.478.5418 or 912.478-0566. You can fax any questions to 912.478.7113 or e-mail ads1@georgiasouthern.edu.

DISTRIBUTION: The newspaper is distributed free to the community of GSU.

COLOPHONE: The magazine is printed by The Statesboro Herald Publishing Co. in Statesboro, Ga. Body copy in The George-Anne is 10 point Minion Pro on 12 leading. Standard headline size is 40 point Myriad Pro. For more information about the newspaper, please call 912.478.7459, or e-mail the director of student media at kcalloway@georgiasouthern.edu.

SUPPORT: The George-Anne is funded primarily through revenue from advertisements placed in the paper and receives additional support, in part, from the Student Activities Budget Committee.

STUDENTS BEWARE: The George-Anne screens all advertisements prior to publication. The magazine strives to accept ads for legitimate products and services only. Students are urged to exercise caution when replying to ads—particularly those which require a credit card number, other personal information, or money in advance of the delivery of a product or service. Students are also urged to report to the newspaper any suspicious offers which they might see in an ad. Remember, if an offer seems too good to be true, it probably is.

DISPLAY AD DEADLINE: The deadline for reserving space and submitting advertising copy is Noon, one week prior to the intended publication date. For more information, rate cards, sample publications, contact the advertising manager or student media director.

PROOFING/ERRORS/OMISSIONS: The newspaper makes every reasonable effort to correct and complete information in advertisements. However the advertiser is responsible for any errors in advertisements and its liability for adjustments is limited to the amount of space the error occupied in the ad. Further, the newspaper is not responsible for any damages caused due to an ad's omission from a particular edition and its responsibility solely is to reschedule the ad in the next regular edition at the regular advertising rates.

CIRCULATION INFORMATION: Mail subscriptions are not available at this time. However, readers may visit our web site for free access to current and past issues. Visit www.gadaily.com to view online issues. The George-Anne is distributed free of charge on the Georgia Southern campus and surrounding areas.

NOTICE: Readers may pick up one free copy, and a second for a roommate or acquaintance, at distribution sites. Additional copies are 50 cents each and are available at the Williams Center. However, unauthorized removal of additional copies from a distribution site constitutes theft under Georgia law, a misdemeanor offense punishable by a fine and/or jail time. Editors will seek to have any person(s) who removes more than the authorized number of copies from distribution sites prosecuted to the full extent of the law.

EDUCATION

9-10:15 a.m., and McCallum's forum will take place on Thursday, Nov. 19 from 9-10:15 a.m. The location for these events has not yet been announced.

Thomas Kolballa currently serves as the associate director of the University of Georgia's office of science, technology, engineering and mathematics.

Koballa wrote in his cover letter that the "assets that I would bring to the position are my knowledge of current school and higher education practices and policies, an appreciation for the educational needs of Georgia students and associations with many of the State's education leaders."

Koballa earned his Ph.D. in curriculum and instruction from Pennsylvania State University and a M.A.Ed in science education and a B.S. in biology from East Carolina University.

Steve McCallum currently serves as the head of the department of educational psychology and counseling at the University of Tennessee-Knoxville, a position he has held since 1997.

In his cover letter, McCallum wrote that he is "responsible for helping faculty coordinate and deliver the curriculum, maintain and develop programs, recruit diverse and competent faculty and students and plan for the future" at the University of Tennessee-Knoxville.

McCallum earned a Ph.D. in school psychology from the University of Georgia and an M.A. in experimental psychology and a B.A. in psychology from Georgia Southern College.

McCallum received the College of Liberal Arts and Social Sciences outstanding alumnus award in 2002.

Whoever receives the position will take the place of Cindi Chance, who served as the dean of COE from 2001 until this year. Stephanie Kenney currently serves as the interim dean.

A search is also underway for the dean of the College of Information Technology. Also, Fred Whitt, dean of the College of Health and Human Sciences, will step down in December. Means is expected to name an interim dean for CHHS in the coming weeks.

Halloween for the broke

is a graduate student in Spanish education from Americus, Ga. He is a staff columnist for The George-Anne.

It's Halloween! If you are 3-12 years old, it's the greatest night of the entire year. You probably get to stay out past your bedtime, eat candy way past dinner time and pretend to be someone else for a night. If you're in college, well, it's the same thing - no bedtime, eating candy and pretending to be someone else.

If you are like me, you may STILL have no idea what kind of costume you will be wearing, and Halloween is in two days! If this is you, you likely don't want to spend $50 on a costume.

I've been brainstorming for a few days now and have come up with some tips for some costumes that should be relatively easy to throw together between now and that party you'll be going to later tonight.

Coke Can. Or anything in the cylindrical shape (salt shaker, beer can, can of soup, etc.). Go to your local gas station. Behind most gas stations, there is a bin of used cardboard boxes they are throwing away. First, grab some of these boxes, wrap them around you in the size and shape you want. Then color them by wrapping them in paper, bed sheets or spray paint in the appropriate color for your costume. If the theme of your costume is not apparent immediately, give everyone a clue, such as a logo, or a big "S" if you are trying to look like a salt shaker. Get some shoe strings or anything you can find and make them into shoulder straps. Duct tape always works, too. You are looking good already.

Astronaut. If you happen to have some aluminum foil in your kitchen drawer, pull it out, wrap yourself in it and put on a pair of goggles and a bike helmet. You could also pass as test pilot, race car driver or alien. Just add the appropriate accessories.

Toga. This one is too easy. Grab the sheets off your bed - preferably white ones - and wrap yourself in them in the shape of a toga (Think: Google images). Pick some bushes outside of your friend's apartment and make a wreath-looking thing to put on your head. People will get the idea. Tell them you are Brutus.

An action figure. You most likely have a hobby. If not, maybe you should look into that. Most hobbies have equipment, like soccer shinguards, orange safety vests, camouflage coveralls, a climbing harness or snorkeling gear. Just put it on, and show off a part of your personality. You could always take off your shirt, add some baby oil and call yourself a "sexy _____" (fill in the blank). But use good judgement. Please.

Halloween should not cost a lot of money. If you plan to wear the costume only once, then you should not have to overdraw your account for one night of high fives on your costume.

Try these simple ideas, and maybe all your candy will be free for the night.

Why GSU wins in the recession

Ally Rakoczy
is a junior marketing major from Decatur, Ga. She is a guest columnist for The George-Anne.

The recession is hitting more than students' wallets these days. At Brewton-Parker College in Mount Vernon, Ga., the students are feeling the strain. This small, Christian college of about 1,100 students recently announced that it was going to eliminate 50 percent of its majors due to "significant financial stress of the current national economy," according to BPC President David Smith.

In his letter to the student population, Smith brought up euphemisms like "discontinue" and justifications through financial jargon. After several paragraphs detailing the financial reasons for the "discontinuation" of over half of the college's majors, Smith ended with something that sounded quite like an administrator on the defense:

"You will either determine that you can move forward toward excellence in a changed environment, or you can succumb to an attitude of defeat, blame, and cynicism."

There was not one sentence in this letter that talked about how this change would affect students in the long run of their education or exactly what majors were eliminated. In fact, all it says is, "possibly yours [major] is one of those affected."

I couldn't find one mention in this letter about how it will affect the students or whether they even spoke with students prior to making this decision. The majors being eliminated weren't even listed. Students had to look them up themselves to find out.

Now you're probably thinking, what does this college have to do with me or Georgia Southern? Well, amidst all the budget cuts, furloughs, and hiring freezes here at GSU, we're actually growing. We just topped 19,000 students, and several departments actually added a new graduate degree recently, one of which is the College of Business Administration. Not only that, but as a student body at GSU, we get incredible opportunities to give the university administration input on who we think should lead our school as the next president—something that speaks volumes about the way our institution is run.

So how do we relate? Well, for the most part, we are polar opposites: public versus a private institution, medium versus small, growing versus stagnant. Most importantly though, is not how different GSU is in the obvious ways, but how different we are in some of the more subtle ways.

In a climate where education is the most expensive it has been ever, according to CNNmoney.com, and students are taking out loan after loan for their undergraduate education alone, GSU has actually been rated to have some of the best colleges for the best value in the country by Kiplinger Magazine. Even the Princeton Review rated GSU as one of the top 301 schools in the country and cited its value as one of the determining factors.

What all this means is that we are fortunate to be in an institution that is continuing to make incredible strides academically and otherwise. According to recent releases, the fall 2009 freshman class had an average SAT score of over 1,100 and an average GPA of over 3.0, compared to just three years ago when the average SAT score was still in the lower one-thousand range.

Not only are we growing academically, but we are growing substantially in new construction and quality resources for students and faculty. Hendricks Hall's renovation into a top-of-the-line lab for the Jiann-Ping Hsu College of Public Health will be opening in fall of next year, Centennial Place has some of the most advanced features of any residence halls out there and GSU is getting ready to release its strategic plan with a host of improvements and construction projects that will be accomplished in the next decade alone.

So here we are, at a moment in time when a recession has been barraging the nation for over two years now, but we are fortunate enough to be growing, succeeding and thriving here at GSU. And now, as we usher in a new university president in January of this year, we will be witnesses to some more positive changes that will continue to allow our university to thrive when so many, such as Brewton-Parker College, are not.

I'm thankful for that, but I am also aware that we are part of an incredible institution that continues to change and grow in new and exciting ways constantly. While some colleges are cutting staff, resources and majors, GSU is taking the challenges of the recession head-on and preserving its staff, campus and resources and continuing to put the student first, carving a successful niche into the ever-changing college landscape.

Georgia Southern Mobile connects with parents and students

By Martin Rand

Guest writer

Georgia Southern students have seen many technological changes throughout this calendar year, and now there is another one, Georgia Southern Mobile.

"Georgia Southern Mobile is part of the university's strategy to reach prospective and current students and parents where they are already are — on wireless devices," said Director of Marketing and Communications Christian Flathman.

According to Director of Information Technology Ron Stalnaker, this new web site will have a predefined number of services that are offered through mobile services, and one service it will have access to is the My Georgia Southern account.

This means that current students will be able to access their Wings to view class schedules, look up final and mid-term grades, check any holds and access certain other functions in Wings. There is also access to MY APPS so students can check their Gmail, look for up-coming events on the calendar and check Google docs.

"We are starting to see more and more people using the mobile device as a primary internet device and we wanted to make certain information public to the mobile device," said Stalnaker.

Georgia Southern Mobile will not be just for current students but for prospective students as well. There are features like turn-by-turn directions to the campus, athletic news and scores, online campus directory and university news and events.

Parents will also have access to the mobile web site. It's called parent portal, and once a student allows them to access their My Georgia Southern account, the parent can look at the student's grades and pay his tuition fees from the mobile device.

The mobile web site doesn't feature access to Georgia View, so students will not be able to look at assignments that are posted there. However, it may be added in the future.

"Our goal is to make all of Georgia Southern's online services and products available to mobile users in a secure and convenient way," said Vice President of Information Technology and Chief Information Officer Steve Burrell. "We anticipate adding new features and capabilities on a regular basis."

The partnership with Google has helped make this mobile web site possible. Google, which powers MY APPS, didn't make the whole web site, but it did have a foundation for mobile device technology that allowed Georgia Southern Mobile to be built upon.

"The good news about Google is that we didn't have to do any development in order to make those services accessible for the mobile device," said Stalnaker. "We just kind of packaged all our stuff together."

Just like Google Mobile, Georgia Southern Mobile is completely free and can be accessed through any mobile device, such as a Blackberry, an iPhone, an iPod Touch and other web enabled devices. Students will even be able to use their video game system to get on the web site.

According to Assistant Director of Marketing and Communications Betsy Nolan, the web site launched Oct. 19.

Iron Eagle challenges brains and brawn

By Jake Wallace

Guest writer

Georgia Southern students will be able to test themselves physically and mentally on Saturday afternoon during the fifth annual Iron Eagle Challenge.

Over 25 two-member teams will compete in the challenge, which features running, mountain biking and kayaking with mystery challenges for teams to solve throughout the race.

These mystery challenges test the teams' minds and will require teamwork and problem solving skills to complete.

"[The Iron Eagle] is a great break of being able to be athletic and use your brain to accomplish a task," said Alicia Day, race director for the Iron Eagle Challenge.

Day would not reveal the mystery challenges for this year's race but mentioned that they would be fun, at least for the spectators. She said that one of last year's mystery challenges was to put together a complex puzzle of an M.C. Escher painting.

tion for last year's win.

"We were cold and wet and dirty, but we heard everyone cheering at the finish line, and it drove us," said Turnbull.

Turnbull's team overcame turning over twice during the kayaking portion of the race to finish on top last year, but said that the hardest part of the race for his team was the mental challenges.

"The mental challenges are what makes or breaks people," said Turnbull. "Of course it makes a difference if you can peddle fast on a bike, but if you aren't mentally strong or lucky, then it can really hinder you."

Luckily for the rest of the men's division, Turnbull and his teammate graduated in May, giving other students the opportunity to take home the top prizes in the Iron Eagle Challenge.

One student looking to take that top spot is Josh Whittington, a junior who is competing in his first Iron Eagle Challenge.

Whittington said he is looking to have a good time participating in this rare opportunity.

"This is something that we don't do very

Day mentioned that any team who wanted to win the Iron Eagle would need three key elements: moderate athletic skills, a mind for problem-solving and a mountain bike with a helmet, which is required for all competitors.

She also added that most teams with a sense of humor tend to do very well.

"It's funny because every year the people that are in full costume, that really put so much into it, those are usually the ones that win it," Day said.

Teams will compete in three divisions: men's, women's and co-rec.

Also, there will be three heats of the race, spaced 15 minutes apart, starting at 3 p.m. This is to keep the race field from being too crowded for the competitors.

One of last year's men's division winners, Louis Turnbull, credited his team's drive and determina-often on campus. It's only once a year. I'm really looking forward to being able to reach the finish and participate in my hobbies at the same time," said Whittington.

Whittington believes that his daily training routine for the GSU cycling team will help him in the Iron Eagle Challenge, and that the training he has done with his teammate will build their teamwork skills and help push one another during the race.

Whittington said that he and his teammate will wear matching uniforms to create a sense of unity.

The Iron Eagle Challenge is free to all spectators. Day would not reveal the race course, but affirmed that the race would take place all over campus.

She did say, however, "We have some interesting challenges going on this year over by the water, so that will be hours of entertainment right there alone."

Farmers market practices sustainability

By John Bender

Guest writer

Every Saturday morning through Nov. 21, students can find The Main Street Farmers Market of Statesboro open to the public in the parking lot of the Sea Island Bank on East Main Street.

With locally grown produce, arts and crafts, live music and other kinds of entertainment, The Main Street Farmers Market is offering something new to the area.

Adam Brady of Statesboro's Visitors and Convention Bureau said that the market "brings everyone together and is a testament to Statesboro as a community."

The market is open from 9 a.m.-noon, and once there you will find up to 30 local vendors, according to Brady, and an even larger variety of items for sale that are made right here in Bulloch County.

Recently, the market was awarded a USDA Farmers Market Promotion Grant for 2009. The grant, part of the Farmers Market Promotion Program via the U.S. Department of Agriculture, gave $20,000 to the market.

The submitted grant was co-authored by the Botanical Gardens, Statesboro Visitors and Convention Bureau and the Downtown Statesboro Development Authority.

According to Carolyn Altman, the director of the Botanical Gardens, the general purpose of the grant money will be the "expansion of farmer participation and consumer education."

Part of the plan will be to bring the "queen of farmers markets," Gail Hayden, out from California in November to work directly with farmers and give feedback regarding the market as a whole.

The market also intends to hire a full-time employee or consultant "to work directly with [current] farmers and to recruit new farmers," said Main Street Farmers Market Chair Debra Chester.

Chester also said that they plan to host a conference in February "to promote student involvement and career development." All of this will be intended to assist in the continued growth of Statesboro's farmers market.

The ability for producers to sell directly to consumers is one way the market strengthens our local economy. Further, local consumers can become more aware of what they are buying by purchasing items from local vendors.

To help this process along, "only locally grown food is sold at our market," said Chester.

Thus, the slogan for the Main Street Farmers Market is "know your neighbor, know your food."

The goal is to bring the community together by providing a venue that promotes awareness among consumers and facilitates a demand for locally grown, healthier food at an affordable price.

After all, the option of where to buy food helps consumers become more conscientious.

Chester said, "[It] makes us stop and think about what we are doing as a consumer."

Regarding what the market can accomplish for our community, Altman said that "a challenge of any college community is making the town feel like home for students," and the farmers market is a good way to familiarize yourself with the community.

Chester said that the market "promotes a sense of community" by both providing a place to convene and by supporting the local economy.

This idea of becoming more conscientious of our impact as consumers goes hand in hand with the push for environmental sustainability.

As a result, the farmers market is hosting the Sustainability Fair for the second year in a row in coordination with Georgia Southern's Center for Sustainability. How we can live more sustainable lives in our homes, our schools and our community will be a focus this weekend, Chester said.

"Last year was a great celebration of all things green," said Lisa Legee, director of GSU's Center for Sustainability, "and I expect this year to be even better."

The fair will be taking place this Saturday, Oct. 31, and will include "interactive displays" on sustainability as well as the opportunity to purchase "green" products from varying sources.

This year, there will be a variety of "project examples" which will provide lessons on how to improve our lives when it comes to sustainability.

Chester said that at last year's fair, the "community was brought together to improve how we are living and [becoming] more conscientious in the choices that we make in choosing products [as well as] our decisions on our way of life."

Current and former SOAR leaders to hold reunion homecoming weekend

By Rachel Cason

Staff writer

Before officially becoming Georgia Southern students, we were all required to attend a special orientation called "Southern's Orientation, Advisement, and Registration."

Most of us, though, just know and remember it as SOAR.

SOAR is an event designed to get students registered for classes but also to meet other classmates as well as faculty and staff, according to Paige Phillips, the coordinator of orientation and parent programs.

Exercise science major Jasmine Cutler is a returning SOAR leader for 2010. She started in 2009 and said that she "likes acclimating students to GSU" so much that she has decided to continue for another year.

Cutler said that she came to GSU in 2007 and really liked her SOAR leader, a person Cutler said has become "like a big sister" to her.

Cutler said, "Students don't know how to transition from high school to college, but [SOAR] gives them the feeling of home that I get from Southern."

According to Cutler, one of the most rewarding parts of her job is meeting new students and having them tell her about their backgrounds.

Katherine Kennedy/STAFF

SOAR leaders from 1989-present have been invited to the event.

"I really like meeting [students] and teaching about the resources that are new to students coming from high school to college," she said.

Phillips said that SOAR has been in place since at least the 1980s, and that's why this year is going to be a special tailgate for SOAR leader alumni.

During homecoming weekend, former and current SOAR leaders will meet and enjoy food, "friendship and fellowship," according to Phillips.

Cutler said that they have invited SOAR members from as far back as 1989, and invitees include everyone for whom they had contact information on record.

The tailgate will be a chance for former SOAR leaders to see what has changed and meet the recently installed coordinators and leadership, as well as the newest SOAR leaders.

Cutler said that the way she got started was by going to the on-campus presentations. This got her interested in finding a way to help and give back to the students of GSU.

Erin Campbell, the assistant director of admission, orientation and parent programs, said that newly accepted SOAR leaders formerly took a course called GSU 2222 but will now be taking LEAD 2000.

This is a course that focuses on team leadership, conflict management and other associated topics. Campbell said that in SOAR leaders, she is looking for "someone who brings a variety of experience and someone looking to grow as a leader."

In January, there is a retreat called Camp SOAR that the SOAR team attends and that helps with teambuilding.

There is also a large regional orientation meeting done at a university in the southeast where SOAR members give an educational presentation about what makes GSU's orientation process different.

There are also weekly meetings for the SOAR team that all the leadership members attend.

Campbell explained that to be a SOAR leader, one must have a 2.5 GPA and two letters of recommendation, one of which must be from a faculty or staff member of GSU.

Students who are interested in joining the SOAR 2010 team have to have completed one undergraduate semester at GSU by 2010 and must be returning in the fall.

They must also submit an application through the student employment site which includes two essay questions. Interested students should call (912) 478-7627 or e-mail orientation@georgia-southern.edu.

Need an Elective? Looking to Declare a Minor?

FRAUD EXAMINATION

The following courses may be taken as electives after 45 semester hours of credit:

WHITE COLLAR CRIME: (LSTD 3630)

This course examines fraud investigations in the U.S. criminal justice system.

FRAUD AND THE LAW: (LSTD 3631)

This course examines the numerous legal issues associated with conducting fraud investigations.

FORENSIC INTERVIEWS AND INTERROGATIONS: (ACCT 5633)

This course examines human behavior and the signals indicating truth or deception.

The following courses may be taken after credit in an accounting course:

MACRO FRAUD EXAMINATION: (ACCT 4631)

This course examines fraud and the pervasiveness of it in our society.

MICRO FRAUD EXAMINATION: (ACCT 4632)

This course examines 44 of the most common fraud schemes.

The completion of these five courses leads to a minor in Fraud Examination and was designed to prepare students for the Certified Fraud Examiner (CFE) test.

Students who complete the Fraud Examination minor will enhance their undergraduate degree with investigative knowledge helpful in pursuing careers in law enforcement, loss prevention, corporate security, private investigation, fraud control, and many other areas.

FRAUD PERMEATES ALL ASPECTS OF BUSINESS AND SOCIETY.

225 children participate in 'Hall-o-ween'

By Amber Laurin
Guest writer

Georgia Southern and the Department of University Housing hosted "A Spooktacular HALL-o-ween" at Eagle Village on Oct. 26 from 5-8 p.m.

The annual event provided safe and fun Halloween activities for over 225 children from Bulloch and surrounding counties. The event had no age limit, so participants ranged from toddlers to high school.

Children were encouraged to wear their Halloween costumes and have a trial run of trick or treating through the resident hall. While many of the boys opted for scary costumes, favorites among girls were fairies and lady bugs.

Other highlights included a haunted house that attracted parents and kids located in the Eagle Village clubhouse as well as a carnival in the courtyard. There were a variety of Halloween themed games including "spooky" bowling, coloring, fishing, face painting, and a football toss. Prizes were awarded and a balloon was given to each child. Refreshments including popcorn and cotton candy were also provided.

The event was first created when Eagle Village was finished being built in 2005 and each year more of the community comes out to enjoy the festivities. Many of the families have been participating since the first year.

Bulloch County resident Kim Woods said, "This will be our third year attending. It has become a tradition in our family and something the kids always look forward to in October."

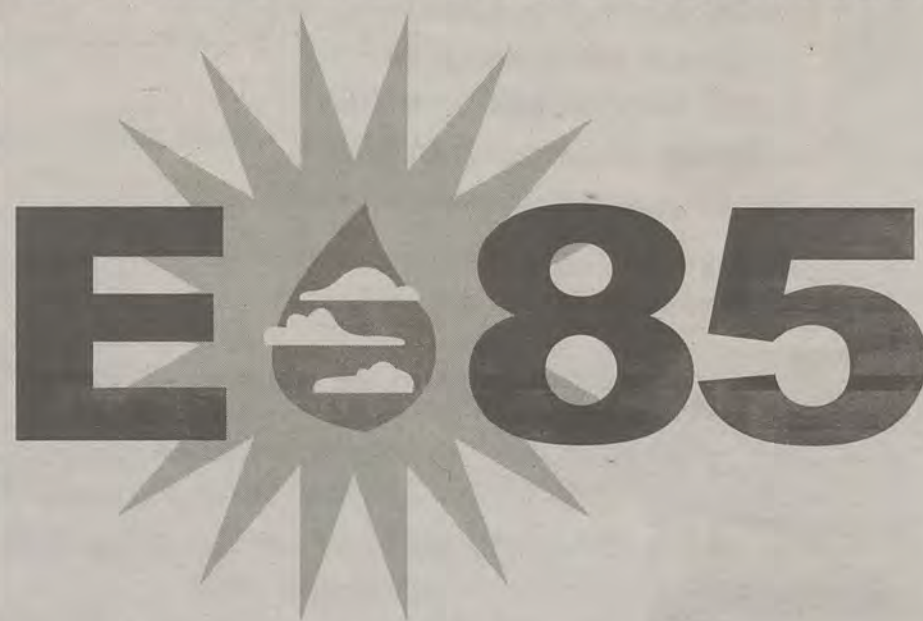

The event was successful with the help of over 60 volunteers from the Department of University Housing, My Sisters Keeper, residents of Eagle Village and other GSU students. Students helped run games, host the haunted house and give out candy to trick or treaters.

Amanda Black, Eagle Village resident said, "Being able to see all of the kids in their costumes has gotten me in the holiday mood; Thanksgiving is right around the corner and then is my favorite - Christmas."

Halloween in Statesboro has always proved to be a weeklong event for elementary to college students. This event, along with many others on campus, has given GSU a chance to give back to the community.

The Department of University Housing plans to continue hosting this event as long as the community shows interest. Those interested in volunteering or getting involved with the event next year should contact DeAnn Dean at (912) 478-4141.

GSU students to perform 'Rocky Horror Picture Show'

By Daniel Fitzgerald

Guest writer

How often do we have the opportunity to see our fellow students dress in drag and partake in musical numbers on stage?

On Oct. 30, students will be given the opportunity to do just that as the annual "Rocky Horror Picture Show" performance comes to the Georgia Southern.

Two performances will be held at 10 p.m. at the Russell Union, free of charge. One cast, directed by Leah Dailey, will be performing in the ballroom, while Jason Scott's cast will perform in the theater. "Goodies" will also be given out to those who attend.

"The play is going to be pretty exciting," GSU student Don Graczyk said. "I've had the opportunity to talk to a good deal of both casts, and they are really cool individuals and are very enthusiastic about what they are doing. I'm looking forward to a really good show."

For those familiar with "Rocky Horror Picture Show" some of what you maybe seen at the show may not come as a surprise; however, those who have not seen a live performance "should be warned" said Don. The show is historically known for being "risqué."

"Rocky Horror appeals to anyone with an open mind or open sense of humor," said Carl Cox, a member of Dailey's cast.

Those who have seen the film before but have not seen it performed live may still be in for quite a surprise.

"Everyone has a good time seeing it for the first time," Scott said. "The virgin games, something we do before the actual show, take all inhibitions out, and that is what they are there for. They are there to prep them and get them in the proper mind set for the show."

Created in 1975 as a parody of science fiction and horror films, "Rocky Horror Picture Show" is known for having the longest-running theatrical release in film history.

Performances such as this have been done for decades, as the film is considered to be among the most celebrated cult classics of all time and was selected for preservation by the United States National Film Registry by the Library of Congress in 2005.

"The performance is about making fun of the movie while enjoying it for what it is at the same time," said Scott.

The Averitt Center is also hosting their annual "Rocky Horror Picture Show" Oct. 29 at 8:30 p.m. Admission is $5 and can be purchased at the Box Office between 1 and 5:30 p.m.

This particular show will be less censored, as it is not a student production, and requires attendees to be 18 years or older or accompanied by a parent. Proper identification will be checked at the door.

When deciding what show to attend, keep in mind, "no two Rocky Horror casts are the same," said Scott.

GSU Botanical Gardens hosts haunted forest for young children

By Cori Mylander

Guest writer

For the first time, the Georgia Southern Botanical Gardens will be hosting a Haunted Forest designed for children in Pre-K-8th grade on Oct. 30 from 5-11:30 p.m.

"Pre-K-2nd graders have a special area where they can participate in Halloween activities, such as face painting and crafts, and can go on a hayride or listen to stories told by a witch," said Kathy Tucker, an employee at the gardens.

"The older children will walk down the trails in the North Woodland area. It will not be extremely scary, but they will experience a good fright."

Frights and other activities will be provided by students in Brent Wolfe's leadership and programming in recreation class. According to Wolfe, students in this class learn about how to program and lead activities and events.

"The main project for this course is a service-learning project where we are helping the Georgia Southern Botanical Gardens with two community projects," said Wolfe.

Students in Dr. Wolfe's class had the opportunity to choose between helping with the Haunted Forest or Gardenpalooza. In both cases, the students divided into groups and have spent the semester preparing activities for the children who attend both events.

"At the Haunted Forest, we will have about 20 students from the course who have created a haunted trail for children in grades 3-8 and a more fun and playful area for children from Pre-K-2nd grade," said Wolfe.

"The students have created different 'scary' areas for the children to walk through on the trail, such as vampires, a jail cell, a graveyard and a scary movie scene.

The children will be led by a guide who escorts them through all of these things."

This year, the Office of Student Leadership and Civic Engagement provided a grant to help fund the projects with which Wolfe's class is assisting.

With their financial support, the burden is lifted from the Botanical Gardens and the students when it comes to purchasing supplies and equipment.

Because the funds are covered, it makes it easier for the students to be able to participate and for the gardens to put on this event.

Although the project is required for the class, the students participate for other, more important reasons.

"Ultimately, students participate for two reasons," said Wolfe.

"First, assisting with these events is an excellent way for students to put classroom concepts directly into practice. Rather than just talk about leadership or programming, they are getting first-hand experience with these ideas."

"The second reason for participation is to give back to our community. Serving the Botanical Gardens in this way helps the university and our local community," he said.

"The students have worked very hard in creating the trail and the activities for younger children, so I am really looking forward to this event."

The GSU Botanical Gardens is located at 1505 Bland Ave. Those who wish to attend should enter the front gate to the parking area and are asked to carpool. This event and other activities are free, but donations will be accepted.

A look at the top 5 films that scare and thrill audiences

By Ryan Babula

Features editor

The Exorcist (1973)

Definitely the scariest film I've ever seen, "The Exorcist" not only manages to shock its audience but also challenge them long after they've viewed it. It's a film that's strong enough to challenge one's beliefs, and its impact can hit deeply. The film is also a wonderful character study and boasts incredible performances. It's one of the best movies I've ever seen, and I revisit it every year.

Friday the 13th (1980)

This other franchise-starter is a campy, bloody and very fun Halloween movie. The film utilizes its campground setting to full effect and will give you second thoughts about going into the wilderness. The film also acts as a morality piece (barely, I know) and stresses to teens not to have sex and take drugs. Where's the fun in that? For all of its shortcomings, the film gave the gift of Jason Vorhees, and it's great fun.

Drag Me To Hell (2009)

I wish that I could list all of his films here, but anyone who's seen horror done by Sam Raimi knows that they're in for a great time. This film is great tongue-in-cheek entertainment that mixes absurd humor with chilling horror. The soundtrack is what makes the film work and is sure to have one jumping out of his seats.

Trick 'r Treat (2008)

Shelved by Warner Bros. since 2007 and sent straight to DVD this year, this horror-anthology takes four Halloween traditions and intertwines them into a massively fun film. It celebrates Halloween traditions and gives one a deeper appreciation for the holiday. It's a shame that this didn't make it to theaters.

Paranormal Activity (2009)

Still in theaters, this ranks alongside "The Exorcist" as one of the scariest films I've ever seen. I was terrified watching it, and I loved the minimalist approach the filmmakers took to creating it. It's truly unsettling and will make you sleep with the lights on afterwards, if you can even fall asleep.

Volleyball: Eagles face tough test in Paladins and Terriers

By Robert Greene II.

Staff writer

The Lady Eagles volleyball team, fresh off of home victories over Appalachian State and Western Carolina the previous weekend, now faces its biggest test of the season in the Furman Paladins. Furman is undefeated in the conference and 18-3 overall, posting 10 consecutive wins after being picked to finish second in the Southern Conference South Division.

The Eagles, still fighting for a Southern Conference tournament spot at a 7-3 conference record and 17-9 overall, need a win against the Paladins to further solidify their run towards at least a second place finish in the South division, which is currently held by the College of Charleston and is needed to qualify as one of four teams in the SoCon tournament.

So far, only one Southern Conference team has even taken Furman to a fifth set, and that was the Appalachian State Mountaineers, who the Eagles defeated on Saturday, Oct. 24. The Paladins include two players of the week in the Southern Conference for the season, Caroline Adams and Chandler Ambrester. Adams won the award two weeks in a row from Sept. 20-27 and from Sept. 26-Oct. 4.

Caroline Adams was awarded player of the week mainly for her ability to make kills. During the two-week stretch, she had a total of 57 kills as well as 19 blocks. Ambrester received her player of the week award for her play during the week of Oct. 19-25, where she had 40 kills in three matches.

Georgia Southern counters with two of its own players of the week.

Bethany Sanford, who won player of the week twice in the first two weeks of the season, and Kate Van Dyke, who is the most recent Eagle to receive the award in the seventh week of the season, lead the Eagles into this crucial matchup.

In GSU's other matchup with the Paladins, which was on Sept. 26 in Greenville, S.C., the Eagles fell to Furman 3-1. However, that game was a very close affair, with the Paladins winning sets by scores of 25-22, 25-18 and closing with a 25-22 fourth set, while GSU won the third set 26-24. During the contest, Sanford had a double-double with 18 digs and 13 kills.

Also, Van Dyke had 43 assists in that game, but it proved not to be enough against Furman.

The Eagles' other opponents, the Wofford Terriers, are a familiar foe for GSU. On Sept. 25, the Eagles defeated Wofford in Spartanburg, earning a win on a road in a conference where it is very hard to do so.

Right now, the Terriers stand at 4-6 in the conference, and 17-9 overall, and provide the Eagles with a chance to make up more ground in the South Division standings.

With the College of Charleston Cougars traveling to Appalachian State this weekend, a loss by the Cougars, coupled with two GSU wins this week, would give the Eagles a hold on second place going into the final stretch of the season.

The matchup with Furman is at 7 p.m. on Friday, and the game against Wofford is Saturday at 7 p.m. as well.

A fresh start to a career

Freshman standout Brent Russell has made an immediate impact and solidified the defensive line

By Latrice Williams

Redshirt freshman Brent Russell has made an immediate impact on the Georgia Southern defense.

His talent and performance have been much-needed and his efforts have made the GSU defense a serious threat to their competitors.

After suffering a knee injury last season, Russell amazingly found a way to achieve the starting role as defensive tackle.

His great contributions to the true blue have helped him earn the "Lineman of the Week" accolade three times this season.

In the Southern Conference, Russell is ranked third in sacks and fourth in tackles for loss and fumbles forced.

Unlike most athletes, Russell didn't begin his football career until the tender age of 12.

"At first, I was just doing wrestling, but then my brother kept bragging about how good he was in football, so I had to see what all the hype was about," he said.

Schools such as Troy, Liberty and Wake Forest took an interest in Russell, but he couldn't help falling in love with the traditions here at GSU.

"The six national championships caught my attention. Once I saw the flags waving, I knew that I wanted to be here," said Russell.

Even though Russell's talents are above the D-1AA level, he was familiar with the Southern Conference and wanted to be a part of it.

"The SoCon is very competitive and I knew I wanted to play in this conference," he said.

The past few seasons have been tough for the Eagles, and with the playoff hopes in the picture, the word "pressure" has been a more relatable word for Russell.

"I think there is always a little bit of pressure to perform. I get it from my teammates and the coaches. They really push to play better," he said.

The Eagles have had their share of ups and downs this season, but Russell is proud of the big victories they have achieved thus far.

"Western Carolina was a really good game for us. It was a great home game win. I think we performed well against Chattanooga too," Russell said.

Some athletes have a notion that wearing the same shirt or sock will bring them luck, but Russell believes that "how well you prepare is how well you will do."

Although the games get rough, Russell admits that football is a big part of his life.

"I love playing football. I have never wanted to quit. I'm not a quitter. I love to compete and I can't stay away from this game," he said.

In his spare time, Russell enjoys other things besides football.

He said, "I like to read westerns. I also like to go deer hunting and riding out in the woods. There's not a lot to do in Athens. Everybody goes to the Bulldog games, and that's about it."

In high school, Russell lettered in football, track and wrestling. He led Madison County High School to consecutive playoff appearances for the first time in 20 years.

Russell was named AAAA Preseason Honorable Mention All-State by the Georgia HS Football Magazine. His junior year, he won the Region 8-AAAA shot put title and he won the Class 4A Heavyweight wrestling title, posting a 56-1 record.
