U.S. Citizenship under investigation

Only legal students permitted to receive federal financial aid

Kelley NORMAN • guest writer

Student residency statuses are under investigation by state offices in order to confirm financial aid claims.

The Georgia Board of Regents' Residency Verification Committee has ordered all campuses to review admissions processes and determine whether undocumented students are receiving local or federal aid.

Georgia Southern already has a policy in place regarding the disbursement of federal aid to students.

"Only legal, documented students can receive federal aid," said Teresa Thompson, vice president of student affairs and enrollment management. This applies to in-state tuition as well.

"For Federal aid, students have to verify their citizenship or alien registration with a FAFSA Form," Thompson said.

The issue was ignited by Jessica Colotl, a Kennesaw State student who was found to be paying in-state tuition as an undocumented student.

"That is the incident that brought the situation to our attention," said Willis J. Potts, Jr., the chair-elect of the Board of Regents.

The purpose of the residency verification committee is to be sure that undocumented

Eagle Incentive Program marks beginning of college career for some freshmen

Georgia Southern's new freshmen become oriented to campus on their first week through classes, learning the locations of each building and even hanging out with their new friends while eating at Landrum for the first time. Now is the time for them to explore the various venues Georgia Southern has to offer, and try new things before the rest of the freshman class joins them in the fall.

Landrum brings brunch on Sundays

GSU Brunch unites students, Statesboro community

Georgia Southern's Landrum Dining Center is now offering a Sunday brunch from 10:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. The late-morning meal is open to both students and the Statesboro community, and features breakfast and lunch staples like eggs, toast and grits.

"We welcome the community to come dine with us anytime," said Vernon Littles, General Manager of Landrum's Sunday brunch.

Littles said that alumni and locals can visit campus while also having a meal. This brunch brings together a synthesis of two communities, where the Statesboro community and the GSU community can come together and enjoy a meal, according to Littles.

Allison Harper, who is employed by Eagle Dining Services, said "this will be a great way for Landrum Dining Center to open its doors to the community."

Many students did not know that the Eagle Dining Service cafeterias were open to the community for every meal. There was no opposition to opening up the doors of the dining halls to the community from students; most thought it a good idea, figuring that opening the doors will bring in extra funds for GSU.

All Eagle Dining Service locations are open to the community throughout the week.

students are not allowed to receive any benefits from in-state tuition, according to Potts.

"The law prohibits any such financial aid," he said.

Dedric Levines, international studies major and a native of Germany, thinks the policy is unfair.

"I really don't agree with it, because there are some students who weren't born here... They came here when they were very young, due to their parents," he said.

A resident of Georgia for seven years, Levines also believes there are other reasons undocumented students should be eligible for federal aid.

"If you've been here for years... everything that applies to us should apply to them as well," he said.

Levines said the policy could cripple a student's financial situation.

"Not only does it affect them financially, [but it also] has a major impact on their education. Some people wouldn't be able to go to school if it wasn't for federal money," he said.

Potts made it clear that "the federal law indeed allows undocumented students to attend higher education" and said the board was "in compliance with the law."

The regents were not alone in their interpretation of the law, according to Potts.

"Forty-nine of the 50 states agree with where Georgia is on this," said Potts. "The only state that has passed a state law prohibiting undocumented students from attending higher education at a public institution is the state of South Carolina."

Potts also believes this is a debate that needs to occur at the national level.

"I think that the [U.S.] needs to decide what it wants to do regarding immigration and citizenship," Potts said. "When they do so, I'll be happy to do everything I can to make sure we're in alignment with that."

Our View

Big brother, not the only one watching

Throughout the past few weeks at Georgia Southern, we have come to notice an epidemic that is sweeping the campus. Many students don't realize it, but they are presenting themselves in the wrong light, and may not be leaving a good impression on those who matter.

Since when does a female student need to wear black patent leather heels, black mini shorts, a torn shirt bearing her chest and midriff, and full bar makeup as if she were going to Rudy's while attending her 10 a.m. class? What impression would the professor have of his student if he were to see her dressed in that particular fashion?

Clothing choice is not the only faux pas that has darkened our campus, but also student conduct in the classroom. Some students view the summer as a time when they can show up late to class, day in and day out, even though it's disruptive to those who utilize the summer to learn and graduate on time.

Other students choose to disrupt class by surfing the Internet while the professor is giving a lecture, something GSU often looks down upon. Some of these Web sites such as, YouTube, Twitter and Facebook can be quite distracting to both the person on the Web sites, and those around him.

On the opposite end of the spectrum, some students pay attention in class and try a different approach to receiving good grades. However, what they don't realize is that they too, are distracting. Students raise their hands constantly to criticize the teacher, brag of their own accomplishments, or to show-off their own work that they completed early, without the teacher's authority. These students tend to come across as superior, brown-nosing, and frankly, quite annoying. Learning to be humble will get one far in life.

Right now is the time when we, the students of GSU, should ban together and act like the respectful young adults we are becoming. Due to the constant SOAR sessions that inhabit our campus and the additional visitors, we need to look better than ever to ensure that incoming freshman will love this University as much as we do.

Downloading Disobedience

Recently, the Obama administration has begun to take steps to crack down on the piracy issues that have been a problem since the invention of the technology. The new anti-piracy plan will combat the illegal sale of American products at home and abroad, such as movies, shows, video games, software and counterfeit goods. Steps have already long been taken to put a stop to illegal downloads from Internet sites and torrents.

Why has the Obama administration suddenly jumped on this issue? Well, according to a recent report, the U.S. government has been deprived of hundreds of millions of U.S. tax dollars through piracy.

That's right, the government is doing it because of taxes.

Please don't misunderstand. Piracy is a crime I do not condone. It involves stealing something someone put all his or her effort into and then selling for the pirate's own benefit. But it should be fought for the right reasons, and not because the government is losing money. In reality, they're just making things like music and movies that much harder for the public to access.

Music and entertainment should be something for everyone, not just the few that have the money to go buy a DVD or a CD. Illegally downloaded music should not be a crime as long as it's not being distributed for a profit that the creators will never see. Sharing and duplicating a copy of content and information is not the same with stealing property. Illegally downloaded songs do not translate into a loss of profit.

Theft removes the original. This so called 'piracy' is simply making a copy of the original. Calling downloading music illegal is like walking around with a bottle of Mallory McLendon is a sophomore and psychology major from Stillmore, Georgia. She is the features editor of the George-Anne.

Coca-Cola and sharing it with a friend. It's still not stealing, even though two people are now using the same product. Stealing is taking the bottle of Coca-Cola, ripping the label off, putting a fake one on, and then selling it for your own profit.

Copy restrictions are not about due credit or the interests of the artist, but a market control and exploitation of creative work for financial gain by a few corporate giants. The only time real theft occurs is when the copied information is sold to customers who want to get a cheaper deal on a CD.

Now, I'm not saying that everyone should go out and download music as a civil disobedience. That's not what I'm trying to press here, at all. Students can get into so much trouble for the rest of their lives for illegal downloads, not to mention jail time.

But music should be for the many, not for the few. A real artist makes his or her music to be heard and to reach out, not simply for a profit.

More vacation for your buck

Brandilyn Brown/STAFF

Mallory MCLENDON
features editor

Summer is here! With summer solstice arriving Monday, we have finally reached a new season and higher temperatures. These are the days of the sun and sand, tan skin and lots of ice-cream. It's time to kick back and enjoy my days off.

But, one problem. I have only $16.34 in the bank. That's not going to get me far at all. So, like most students, I seek out the cheapest vacation spots this side of Georgia for some fun in the sun.

Admittedly, I'm not going to get too far on just sixteen bucks and a few odd cents. So, here's where I have to enlist the help of a few good buddies to share expenses with.

So, first stop on our no-expenses paid vacation is Splash-in-the-Boro. As a Georgia Southern student, I receive a nifty 2 dollar discount at the door. Those above the elevation of four feet only have to pay $8. Those below will pay a fee of $7.

Splash is equipped with two slides, a lazy river, a dual flowrider, spray ground, mat slides, a leisure pool, a play pool, a lane pool and a therapy pool. With an added concession stand and lockers to store your valuables, Splash is ideal for a day of fun and leisure with all your friends.

If Splash doesn't tickle your fancy, there is always Tybee Island Beach. With a jar full of quarters and a bit of cash for lunch, Tybee is a great place to kick back and soak up some rays. Just make sure you and your friends split the gas bill, so no one is put out for money.

And, while everyone is probably going to demand Spanky's for lunch, there are cheaper places along the Tybee coast that are just as good. A personal favorite of mine is Lighthouse Pizza. They're no Pizza Hut and they aren't as cheap as Hungry Howies, but you can get two large pizzas for around 35 dollars, with the costs of drinks for five. Split it up between you and your friends, and each will pay about $7 each.

While Tybee is nearly a two hour drive away, there are still other options closer to home. George L. Smith State Park is a great place for a day to reacquire yourself with nature. There's no entry fee and plenty of places to have a nice picnic, camping or fishing.

If you're planning on a camping trip, there is a fee of $24 per night between choices of over 25 campsites to reserve. The park also rents out fishing and paddle boats, as well as guided kayak tours. George L. Smith is great if you're interested in bird watching, biking and hiking through a variety of trails around the Mill Creek Pond.

Any of these choices is sure to fill your need for a day of relaxation away from school, jobs and any kind of stress currently ruling your life. If you don't even have the measly $16 in your bank like me, save up money throughout a week or two and give yourself a treat one weekend. It'll be enough to get you through the days and a nice tan to boot.

Where are the club sports?

Rick SPURGEON
sports editor

They are, for the most part, at the Recreational Activity Center (RAC). There are 32 teams, with everything ranging from Cricket, to Rugby, to Tae Kwon Do. Those that don't practice here on campus use facilities nearby such as nearby high schools.

Organizations like the GSU Running Club are able to use the entire campus as training grounds. They're also able to take advantage of events put on by other student groups.

The club level of sports provides another level of competition between inter-collegiate and intramural sports. Clubs such as Southern Rugby (men's rugby football) and Georgia Southern Ultimate (men's ultimate frisbee) host large annual tournaments and play other large university teams like Georgia Tech and Auburn. There should be more to see and hear from our clubs as they become another part of GSU athletic excellence.
