First ever women's book club comes to campus

BY BAILEY ADCOCK

The George-Anne staff

Fifty Shades of Ladies (FSL), GS' inaugural women's book club, aims to provide a female-empowering environment where girls can get together and discuss the books they have read.

The main purpose of the organization is to bring together women from all different shades and walks of life based on their literary interests, according to the club's MyInvolvement page.

The club was started by Taylor Brown, a junior here at Georgia Southern.

"I hope to make Fifty Shades of Ladies a very well-known club on campus for its uniqueness and I hope to drive other students on campus to read more than just their textbooks," Brown, junior health education and promotion major and president of Fifty Shades of Ladies, said.

Being a part of a book club allows members the opportunity to actually enjoy reading, instead of being forced to read books for class.

"The idea came about when I was looking to join a book club on campus and found that there wasn't one," Brown said.

The club is open to all women who hold at least a 2.0 GPA.

According to the National Literacy Trust, reading can also increase an individual's understanding of other cultures, their general knowledge, community participation and a greater overall understanding of human nature.

In addition to the obvious benefits of reading like increasing vocabulary, pleasure reading also provides an opportunity to escape the real world and relieve the stress of day-to-day life.

"[Reading] is super relaxing and a different experience from a movie, it makes me forget about things I have going on in my life," Dana Beckman, freshman political science major, said.

Many students burn out on reading after being forced to read in various English classes, but choosing to read is a completely different thing.

Participating in a book club like Fifty Shades of Ladies can provide members many opportunities.

Information for participating in the club is available on MyInvolvement and potential members must fill out the application on the website to be accepted in.

According to their page, the main purpose of the organization "is to bring together women from all different shades and walks of life based on their literary interests".

This is FSL's first semester and there are already plans in the works for how to strengthen the club for the future.

"Next semester we will begin having what we call Open Discussion. It will provide a chance for students who aren't a part of the organization to participate in the conversation about our current book," Brown said.

Next semester will be filled with opportunities for students not involved to be involved and learn more about membership, with a FSL Week in the works.

Homecoming for a good cause

BY BAILEY ADCOCK

The George-Anne staff

Homecoming week at Georgia Southern is filled with exciting social events that involve students, alumni and faculty throughout the week.

One aspect of Homecoming that goes somewhat unnoticed is the philanthropic aspect.

Many of the events put on during homecoming benefit local organizations and provide much needed financial funds and other resources to the local community.

Eagles for Eagles

One organization benefiting from homecoming week is Eagles for Eagles.

The event is sponsored by the Student Government Association (SGA) and is an organization dedicated to providing financial support to GS students who are experiencing monetary hardships.

The organization benefitted from both Pennies for Eagles and Doo-Dah ticket purchases this year.

Various organizations on campus participated in Pennies for Eagles, playing with the new spin given to each day.

Last year during homecoming week, student organizations raised over $4,000 through Pennies for Eagles alone.

With other events like Doo-Dah and an Interfraternity Golf Tournament, Georgia Southern organizations were able to raise over $9,000 total for Eagles for Eagles last year.

Sculpt-It for the Food Bank

In addition to Eagles for Eagles benefitting from homecoming week, another event that helped out the local community was the Sculpt-It for the Food Bank competition.

This competition consisted of teams from across campus who gathered up canned goods and non-perishable items to be given to the local food bank.

Each team was expected to create a sculpture out of these goods in order to compete against each other.

Though these are only a few of the events that take place during homecoming week, for the Statesboro community, these events do a world of good all year long.

“She Kills Monsters” opens in the CAT

BY TARA BAILEY

The George-Anne contributor

The Georgia Southern Theatre and Performance Program presents “She Kills” Monsters at the Center for Art and Theatre from Nov. 9 to Nov. 17.

Playwright Qui Nguyen tells the story of a young woman, Agnes, whom after finding her sister’s “module,” enters her sister’s fantasy world to learn more about the sister that she lost in a car crash.

“Behind all of the flashy effects and choreography in this play is a very touching story about loss and regret that never fails to move me no matter how many times I see it. I hope they find it as haunting as I do,” Nicholas Newell, Director, said.

Kelsey Poole, a senior multimedia major, who plays the character Agnes, explains that this show will feature many fighting scenes, along with some dancing scenes.

“We started with a boot camp with working out and then with practicing with specific weapons,” Poole said.

The show is about more than just a fantasy world or role play, it is about finding closure after losing someone.

Sade Thomas, who plays Agnes’ sister, Tilly, hopes viewers will leave with a message about acceptance after seeing the show.

“One thing to take from this is acceptance, and when you have the time, make the most of it,” Sade Thomas, senior psychology major, said.

The show opens Wednesday, Nov. 9 at 7:30 p.m. and will continue until to Nov. 17 at the Center for Art and Theatre (CAT). Student tickets are $6. Faculty, staff and community tickets are $12. To make a reservation, call the box office at 912-478-5378.

GS achieves historic enrollment record

BY ERIN MCGUINNESS
The George-Anne staff

Georgia Southern University experienced record-setting enrollment numbers for the Fall 2016 semester with total enrollment for full-time students standing at 20,674. Since 2010, GS has seen a 4.9

percent increase in enrollment – approximately 1,000 students. From Fall 2015 to Fall 2016, there was a 200-student increase. Additionally, the University holds an 82 percent retention/graduation rate. Founded in 1906, Georgia Southern University is the state’s largest center of higher education south of Atlanta with 124 degree programs, division 1 athletic programs and over 200 student organizations. “We have wonderful people here who day in and day out keep student support as their main objective,” Teresa Thompson, Ph. D., vice president of student affairs and enrollment management, said. Although enrollment continues to rise, tuition and student fees remained the same last year, and Dr. Thompson said that although these decisions are not up to the institution, GS does not anticipate an increase in tuition or fees in the near future. Thompson said, “Our students, their families and our alumni are our greatest ambassadors as they continue to tell others about the great experiences they are having here.”

Over $250,000 in grants awarded by Center for Sustainability

BY GEORGE ANDERSEN
The George-Anne staff

The Georgia Southern Center for Sustainability has awarded $251,310 to various academic departments and other projects for the fiscal year of 2017. This money has been granted to 18 projects that will range from the restoration and preservation of Eagle Creek to increased access of bike repair for university students that will be located near the dorms. Other projects include solar lighting for the RAC walking trail, an effort to restore the population of and increase food for the pollinators, such as bees, on the campus Greenway trail and the GrowZone. The GrowZone will be a place at the Botanic Gardens for students to learn about growing plants. Including the grant money awarded this year, the Center for Sustainability has allocated almost a million dollars in grant money since it started in fiscal year 2013. One of the largest projects that was awarded grant money this year is the restoration of Eagle Creek. “Eagle Creek is Georgia Southern lore, and it’s actually an important creek for biological diversity,” Lissa Leege, Director for the Center of Sustainability, said.

The goal of restoring Eagle Creek is to plant more flowers and plants as well as rearrange the infrastructure of the creek in a way that will make it the most fit to support the wildlife that depends on it. Many of the projects include plans intended to foster more ecologically-friendly behavior in students, including bottled water refill stations and bicycle repair stations outside of the dorms. Multiple bicycle repair stations will be located outside of student dorms that will allow cyclists to pump their tires and use tools to fix whatever would otherwise hinder them from biking around campus. Another project that will go into effect with a grant of $32,572 is the development of platforms to access data on sustainable biodiversity on campus. The goal of this project is to increase biodiversity on campus and to make students and faculty more aware of campus wildlife. The project involves putting cameras on campus to find out what kind of wildlife frequents the areas and considering whether the placement of buildings and other factors are harmful to their coexistence. Leege said, “[The project will help] us to understand that our campus is a really important place for wildlife.”

Morgan's Road

HOW ONE BAND TURNED HEARTBREAK INTO HARMONY

Ben Woodruff and Tyler Perry are pictured with the sweetheart who inspired the band name, Chris Deaver's daughter, Morgan. She was pictured on the first album and stays in the loop with the band.

BY ARAYA JACKSON
The George-Anne staff

Each band that tours Statesboro brings with them a unique story of how they became a band and what defined them. Charleston, South Carolina band Morgan's Road and their heartbreaking tale is one story that Statesboro cannot let escape unnoticed.

Their backstory and how they became who they proudly are today was no easy journey for the guys. The original band came out five years ago, known as the Kingstreet Band.

One night in April 2011, good friend and bassist Chris Deaver was shot and killed in a robbery while working late night at a pawn shop. The guys never thought they would play together again.

However, they overcame tragedy and allowed it to bring them closer than ever, for Chris especially. The guys knew they wanted to change the band name, but were unsure of what would best represent them.

The singer, Ben Woodruff, and the drummer, Tyler Perry, play at an outdoor music venue. Morgan's Road has played at venues in cities ranging from Charleston, SC, to New Orleans, LA, to Nashville, TN.

IN HIS MEMORY AND HER HONOR

It was not until frontman and acoustic guitarist Ben Woodruff started to go to bed one night that he had a new band name epiphany.

"It just kinda hit me, not in a dream, but it just happened. I knew Morgan was gonna have a road ahead of her that she'd have to walk on without her dad," Woodruff said in a phone interview. "It's a generic name, but the meaning behind it is far from generic. It takes back the generic."

Naming the band after a great friend's daughter could not have fit better for the group. Such tragedy brought grateful opportunity and growth upon their lives.

Track List

A MEDLEY OF MUSICAL STYLES

Today, accompanying Woodruff, you will find vocalist and drummer Tyler Perry, lead guitarist Skot Bradley and alternating bassists Matt Chmielecki and Brook Sutton.

Morgan’s Road does not classify themselves with a genre mentality. Woodruff described their style as playing what they want, when they want. Woodruff, with a large country upbringing himself, said they sometimes see themselves as a smooth mix of the Lumineers and Chris Stapleton.

“We’re looking for big bass drum sounds and vibes like that from the Lumineers, with the narrative of Chris,” Woodruff said.

Think of them as youthful, funkified Americana, mixed with some southern rock and country. Their music can be seen in a wide array of appealing styles. You’ll find much of this in their first album, Topics of Love.

However, as they are currently working hard in the studio on new material, they are leaning towards a more renowned, rootsy grace, emerged by maturity and Woodruff’s recent move to Nashville. Woodruff intends on this album to be focused much more on narrative style and groove.

ON THE ROAD AGAIN

The guys have been all over the southeast, up north to places like Cincinnati, Kentucky and Ohio, and performed with big name artists such as The Marshall Tucker Band, Hootie & the Blowfish, Lee Brice, Devon Allman, Colt Ford, Kellie Pickler, Sister Hazel and Atlas Road Crew.

There’s no sleeping on this band or the fun vibes they carry with them.

“We are such a fun show, but every show is different. If you see us Friday in Charleston, you won’t see the same show Saturday in Statesboro,” Woodruff said. “I don’t even know what I’m gonna do yet. Skot is gonna take his shirt off though. He doesn’t always, but he will for Statesboro.”

That is a promise Skot is not allowed to break.

With all the fun and talent that Morgan’s Road carries, incredibly, they still keep longtime friend Chris Deaver in mind with all that they do.

Woodruff said, “He always had a smile on his face, and we always keep one on ours for him.”

You can catch Morgan’s Road first show here this Saturday at Dingus Magee’s. Their set starts at 9:30 p.m. and there is a cover charge of $5 for the concert.

Students react to President-Elect Donald Trump

DEVIN CONWAY

Conway is a junior journalism major from Manchester, New Hampshire.

In a historic and completely unprecedented upset, Donald J. Trump has been selected as the next president of the United States of America.

Virtually every national poll, political pundit and international entity predicted a Clinton victory, and in many instances, a Clinton landslide.

As it turns out, it looks like the outcome will actually end up being a Trump landslide.

As this article is being written, he currently sits at 290 electoral college votes, with a seemingly insurmountable lead in Michigan, which represents another 16 electoral votes in itself.

New Hampshire is another state that is technically too close to call at the moment, but Clinton has a slight lead, and for the sake of argument,

I'll grant her the four electoral votes that she would receive given a victory in the state.

If this trend continues and Michigan is called for Trump, he will end up with 306 electoral votes to Clinton's 232, once again assuming Clinton pulls out New Hampshire.

In many ways, Trump's election was a sort of quiet revolution.

His nationwide success can be attributed to an American public that is fed up with the status quo: the political and mainstream media establishments that they believe have mislead them and robbed them of their dignity, economic security and cultural identity.

Trump was able to convince his base that he was the only candidate who could offer solutions to these issues, and these voters bought into his irreverent populism.

However this election ended, there was an inevitable sense of pain and frustration that would come from whichever side ended up losing the race, and a lot of work to be done in our communities to heal the divide.

I spoke to a few students about Trump's unexpected win, his appeal and the future of America under a Trump administration.

How do you explain the Trump victory?

"Well it's no surprise that this election was very divided upon race. For one, I think he was really honest about everything he said, I feel like that's how he really feels. I think he spoke for people who feel the same way but don't really speak up about those issues."

Is this the result that you saw coming, and if not, what did you expect to happen?

"Honestly, it was really close, so either way I wouldn't have been shocked. Towards the end I thought Clinton would win because she's a female, and that people were going to vote for her just for that reason, but I wasn't really shocked that Trump won."

What policies do you see Trump instituting, and how do you think that will benefit or worsen the state of the country?

"He's not gonna allow anyone that's not supposed to be in America into America, and that's really gonna help out the taxpayers."

Do you think that Trump will be successful in doing what he's trying to do?

"I feel like, whatever he's trying to do, he'll probably end up being successful, but I think it depends. It's going to take him more than four years, and from the way people are reacting and from my personal experience, I don't see him going eight years."

GEORGIA SOUTHERN VS. UL LAFAYETTE

THE HOMECOMING GAME PREVIEW
THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 10 - 7:30 PM
PAULSON STADIUM, STATESBORO GA

BROADCASTED ON ESPNU

GEORGIA SOUTHERN
BY CHRIS SMITH

Coming off an impressive performance against Ole Miss last week, Georgia Southern will be hosting their homecoming game against the University of Louisiana-Lafayette on Thursday. The Eagles fell to Ole Miss 37-27 last week, but their performance showed that their offense is getting life back. It is a short turnaround and it is interesting to see how the Eagles fare.

Last week, the Eagles had a few key players get banged up. Wide Receivers Montay Crockett and Malik Henry will be game time decisions for Thursday's matchup. Crockett participated in practice on Tuesday, but he was limited. Running backs LA Ramsby and Wesley Fields will also be game time decisions.

Matt Breida had played the past few weeks with a bad back, but it unlikely that back will keep him out of the game against ULL.

With quarterback Favian Upshaw being out another week, the Eagles might stay with the same one QB system they used against Ole Miss.

"It gave us the opportunity to do what we wanted to do and that is limiting our packages. In the two Quarterback world, we had too broad of packages. With one Quarterback it gave a chance to center in on what we though can do," head coach Tyson Summers said.

Breida had his first 100-yard game against Ole Miss and will be looking for much of the same against ULL.

A 68-yard three plays into one of their drives in the second quarter showed the crowd a glimpse of the one of the best players in the country last season. Mr. He Gone just might be on his way to getting back to his 2015 form.

Defensively, GS has the task of trying to stop the balanced passing and running game of the Ragin' Cajuns. The young GS secondary will have to find ways to keep ULL Wide Receiver Keenan Bares out of the end zone. Barnes has five touchdowns on the season so far and is averaging 10.5 yards per catch.

The key matchup to watch will be GS' outstanding linebacker Ukeme Eligwe against Elijah McGuire in the running game.

The Eagles host the 3-5 UL Lafayette Ragin' Cajuns for Homecoming, and while the Cajuns don't have the best record, they are fighting for a bowl berth and will get a GS team who's on a short week.

Two of ULL's losses came in 2OT and 4OT, which began a stretch where they've dropped four of their last five games. ULL is also coming off a short week, and like GS, are working to get prepared and rested with just five days' rest. It presents an extra for the Cajuns, who have to prepare for a option-offense that they haven't seen much of this season.

"We're scrambling, as you might guess, with the short week," ULL head coach Mark Hudspeth said in his weekly press conference earlier this week. "It's hard enough to prepare for the option, and having the short week makes it even more difficult."

Hudspeth is trying to prepare a defense for an option offense that may have just found its mojo last week. The Eagles put together arguably their best offensive performance in the 37-27 loss to Ole Miss.

A lot of that responsibility will fall on the shoulder pads of senior linebackers Tre'maine Lightfoot and Otha Peters. The duo have combined for 139 tackles, 13.5 tackles for loss and a few forced fumbles. Up front, Joe Dillon will look to get into the backfield and wreak havoc as he has all season; he has 10.5 tackles for loss to go along with six sacks, both of which are team-highs.

Offensively, the majority of the rushing production has come from Elijah McGuire. He's the only player on the roster with more than 120 yards on the season, and will look to run on a GS defense that has shown gaps in the middle of the defense in the past few weeks.

"They are another tempo-minded team," GS head coach Tyson Summers said.

ULL quarterback Anthony Jennings will be responsible for getting the offense going. He's thrown for almost 1500 yards and five touchdowns this season, and added another three scores on the ground. His main target will be 6' 3" sophomore Keenan Barnes. Barnes has hauled in five touchdowns this season and ULL will look to get him the ball if they get into the red zone.

Both teams come into this game on a short week and needing a win to stay in the hunt for bowl eligibility. While GS has the more talented team, they still need to play well if they want to defend their home turf in front of a big Homecoming crowd.

The Eagles' disappointing season may be turning around after a close loss to SEC Powerhouse Ole Miss. GS looks to get back on track to make a bowl game on Thursday against UL Lafayette.
