Our View

GSU shows good judgment in speakers

Georgia Southern University should be commended for bringing such relevant and interesting speakers for its students.

The latest two groups of speakers announced are former President Jimmy Carter and First Lady Rosalynn Carter and CNN news anchor Soledad O'Brian, brought on campus to speak by the Office of Student Leadership & Civic Engagement and the Multicultural Student Center with the Vice President of Student Affairs and Enrollment Management, respectively.

The 39th President, and only Georgian to occupy the White House, has broad appeal to the student body here at GSU. President Carter is a deeply religious man, which appeals to our many faith-based organizations on campus, a Democrat, which appeals to the left of our campus, and also a native Georgian, which should appeal to the large Georgia-born population of GSU. Even with his many critics, he is still a great choice to speak with students here, as he is the most prominent politician that Georgia has ever had.

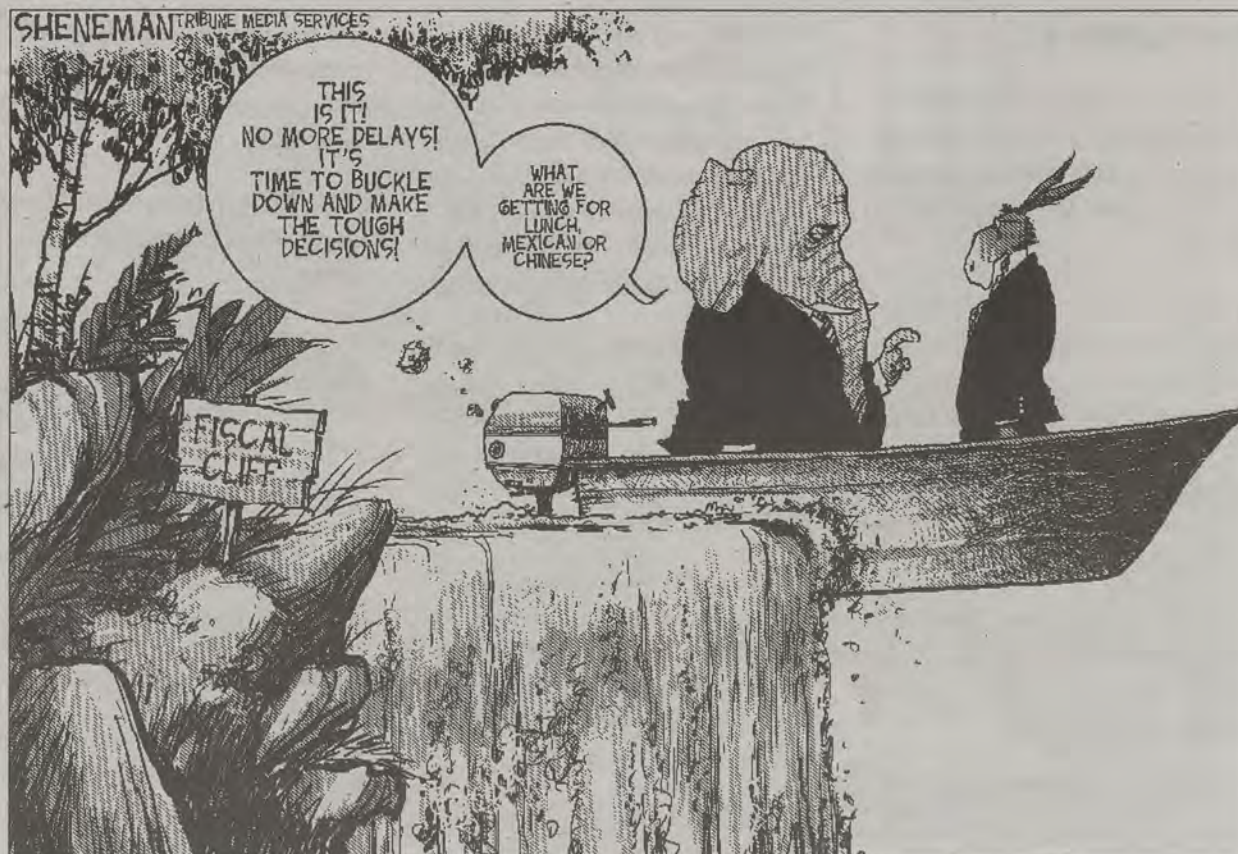

Soledad O'Brian is one of the most renowned news anchors of this day and age. She has won an Emmy for her work covering the news and has hosted four major news shows. Her impressive track record is almost as interesting as her family heritage. She is the daughter of two immigrants, an Australian father and Cuban mother and is of African, Cuban and European descent.

The university has also done a great job of providing speakers who can speak for both sides of the political aisle. In the past, the university has brought in Condoleezza Rice and Rudy Giuliani to speak to the students from the Republican Party.

Students should appreciate and be thankful of the work that the various organizations within GSU do to provide quality speakers.

The George-Anne welcomes letters to the editor and appropriate guest columns. The South will rise again?

Anyone who grew up in the South knows the saying "the South will rise again!" After our most recent elections, it seems that several thousand Georgians — as well as thousands in other states, mainly in Dixieland — have taken this slogan to heart. There are currently two different petitions for the state of Georgia to secede from the USA.

This is such a fantastic idea! Considering that Georgia ranks 37th in poverty level in our current system but would rank fourth best if the South seceded again, the state has a ton to gain. Georgia's economy would be booming with our 2007 — the most recent year I could find — federal tax surplus of $433 dollars per person. For those like me who have to Google what it means, it means we contributed $433 dollars per person that we didn't receive back. The South should be fine, even though all but three states have negative net contribution per capita. And with the reemergence of the confederate dollar, civil war buffs would be in control of the business world.

THE FARM LIFE

JAMES FARMER
OPINIONS EDITOR

What's even better is that we could create a new federal government that gives the majority of the rights to the states and doesn't intrude on interstate issues. So, things like Georgia's ongoing water dispute with Tennessee, Alabama and Florida could get messy quick. But don't worry; a wartime economy is always better than one in peace.

States could even pass their own immigration laws, like the one that Alabama has. Alabama's law was so successful in driving out illegal immigrants that the agricultural industry has projected to have up to $10 million in lost profits. Who needs a federal government to ruin states when our states are perfectly capable of it themselves?

The foreign policy of the new South would be terrific as well. The South overwhelmingly voted for the man who claimed that Russia was our number one geopolitical foe, and since it's unlikely that the USA would let us secede with too many of our nukes, we'd have to start another Cold War.

So, let's put our regional pride and emphasis to heart and sign these petitions to secede! After all, the worst that could happen is that the petition to take away the citizenship and exile those who vote to secede gets turned into law as well.

Democrats are rolling deep

After a prosperous campaign for the Democrats this year, re-electing Barack Obama and gaining seats in the Senate and House, several future leaders of the Democratic Party emerged. The 2012 DNC displayed an impressive lineup, from the 38 year old mayor of San Antonio Julian Castro, who was the first Latino keynote speaker at the DNC, to the Delaware Attorney General, Major in the National Guard and son of the current vice president, Beau Biden.

Additionally, the DNC exposed some potential nominees for future presidential candidates like Newark, NJ mayor Cory Booker, Los Angeles mayor and 2012 DNC permanent chair Antonio Villaraigosa, Massachusetts Governor Deval Patrick, Maryland Governor Martin O'Malley, Florida US Representative and DNC Chair Debbie Wasserman Schultz, and, of course, Joe Biden, and though not present at the DNC, Secretary of State Hillary Clinton will likely be a contender for the Democratic ticket in 2016.

The 2012 election cycle also revealed the extraordinary potential of two Democratic Senators in particular. New York Senator Kirsten Gillibrand set an impressive precedent in her run for re-election by capturing 72 percent of the vote, the largest margin for a statewide candidate in New York history, which is even more impressive considering she is the first U.S. Senator from upstate New York since 1971. She originally assumed office as U.S. senator in 2009 after filling Hillary Clinton's vacant seat, and when she was sworn in, she was the youngest senator at that time at 42. As a senator, Gillibrand has been an advocate for marriage equality, healthcare reform that includes a public option, women's rights, children's health, research and development investment, and government transparency.

Another impressive win was Elizabeth Warren defeating incumbent Republican Scott Brown for the Massachusetts seat. Warren has a very strong background in academics, previously serving as a professor at Harvard Law School, and she has published over 15 books and over 100 articles. She also has an impressive economic and financial background, serving as chairperson of the Congressional Oversight Panel that was created in response to the 2008 financial crisis and as a special advisor to the Secretary of the Treasury's Consumer Financial Protection Bureau in 2010 and 2011. Warren was one of the chief drafters of Dodd-Frank, and she will be a top Democratic candidate for the Senate Banking Committee.

GOP has bright Latino future

After our defeat this year, the GOP is looking at its ranks for some rising stars — people that will propel the party into the new century. Recently, the GOP has been labeled the "old, white man's party," but that is about to change. Some of the biggest stars coming through the ranks are in fact young people, many of which are of color.

The first one that comes to mind is 41-year-old Florida Senator Marc Rubio, a bilingual Cuban immigrant. He has shot from city councilman to Senator in less than a decade. He was Florida's first Cuban-American House Speaker. He won his Senate seat in 2010 after Governor Charlie Crist changed from Republican to independent because he knew he could not defeat Rubio in the primary. In the Senate, Rubio has been one of the loudest voices for comprehensive immigration reform and a co-author of the DREAM Act. Now, if only he could be a loud voice to end the embargo on Cuban cigars.

From the ladies, the first Latina governor in U.S. history is Susana Martinez from New Mexico. Since taking office in 2010, she has pushed for spending cuts and lower taxes as well as changes in education modeled after some of the reforms put in place by former Florida Governor Jeb Bush. Before that, she was a district attorney for 14 years.

From Nevada, Governor Brian Sandoval has taken on several tough challenges facing his state. He has vowed to take on Nevada's poor economy, hit hard with the sharp decline of tourism and environmental regulations. He also has gone about breaking up the education unions in Nevada, which allowed the legislature to pass sweeping education reform.

The Republican Party has learned from the mistakes of this past election. It's realizing that the demographic of the country is changing. The Latino vote, which is the fastest growing demographic in the country, is ripe for the GOP to take. With their strong sense of individualism and devotion to faith, especially to the Catholic Church and social conservatism, they are the figureheads of what the future of the Republican Party is going to be in the 21st century.

Also, the GOP needs to leave social issues to the state and local representatives of the party to deal with. We will not win if we seek to take on social issues on the national level, but we can make sure that the places that want social conservatism get it by electing them to state and local positions. On the national level, we must continue to strive for smaller government and getting the economy back on track with the power of people, not the government.

From Data to Discussions

Lessons can be learned from surprising Latin America growth

The World Bank released a fascinating report Tuesday regarding Latin American and Caribbean economies, economies that have traditionally been very poor with massive income inequality. The report found that from 2000 to 2010, there was a 50 percent increase in the number of people joining the middle class, defined as making between $10 and $50 per day.

Several countries stood out in the report; Brazil accounted for 40 percent of the middle class growth, while Mexico had 17 percent of their population join the middle class. Although this is incredible news, there is still work to be done in those areas, where one third of the population still lives in poverty. Economists do predict, however, that the middle class will continue to grow and bring people out of poverty.

The report cites several specific reasons for the massive growth; a more educated population, more people moving to urban areas, more women in the labor force and smaller families. But two reasons for their growth are particularly important. These countries have enacted policies that emphasize social programs and have also been economically stable, which in large part is due to political stability in the region.

For the better half of the 20th century, middle and upper class citizens of Latin American and Caribbean nations paid little in taxes and expected little from the state. In the late 1990s and early 2000s, these nations began efficiently taxing their citizens and investing in infrastructure projects. As more people began to contribute to public funds, these nations were able to start programs that focused on helping the impoverished get jobs, become educated and ultimately financially stable.

The United States has almost seen this trend in reverse. Over the past ten years, the average worker has only seen their real wage increase by about .1 percent, despite becoming more productive. The income gap between the rich and middle class has grown significantly since 1970 to its highest level ever, also higher than any other advanced nation. Although our situation is very different from that in Latin America and the Caribbean, we could certainly learn something from their recent success.

Letters to the Editor

G-A caters to readers; Silver sour

I would like to address the letters in Tuesday's issue. Yes, The G-A has opinion articles, just like every other newspaper. Yes, they don't cover a lot of what many would consider "news." Get real. The G-A, like any other business, has to cater to its market. The G-A's market is (made up of) students. Yes, they publish articles about student orgs and fraternities. That's because that information is central to its readers. You are not going to see hard-hitting investigative journalism for the simple fact that it's a school paper. They have a limited staff, a volunteer staff, a staff that is made up of students who themselves have other responsibilities. They don't have a huge budget of staff writers who can travel across the nation and they are not an AP news affiliate. I think it is quite impressive that an organization of students can run, write and publish a twice-weekly newspaper at all.

(I want to address) Marc Silver's assertion that The G-A did not cover the on-campus polling station or his candidacy well enough. In every issue where I saw Mr. Silver quoted, I saw that he was listed as a candidate for state house. By my count since Aug. 20, there have been 11 articles directly addressing the issue. Mr. Silver, you LOST. Get over it, grow up and be an adult. Do not blame your shortcomings on the actions of others. If this is how you act over coverage in a school newspaper, how could you possibly handle the job and rejections of being an elected official?

Furthermore, Mr. Silver, would you please STOP taking credit the campus polling. You, sir, did nothing, not a thing. The College Republicans and Bill Herring of the Democratic Party laid the groundwork, the CRs planned the meetings and Mr. Herring formulated the proposal. It was a project two years in the making. You, sir, along with the NAACP, SGA and the university were an invited guest to come on board after everything had been settled. In fact, you were 20 minutes late to the only meeting you attended.

Conservatives troll America

The word "troll" has a few definitions, but the one we're going with today is interchangeable with "jerk," "prankster" and "Glenn Beck." If someone is talking about how Hitler had some good ideas, they are trolling. If someone has ever held your arm, hit you with your own hand and told you to "stop hitting yourself," they are a troll.

If you understand that last concept of what a "troll" is – basically a prankster that not everyone realizes is a prankster – then you should understand the following news item pretty well.

As I write this, residents in over 30 states have created and signed petitions with the aim of achieving peaceful secession from the United States. They want to leave, according to these petitions, presumably in response to President Obama's re-election.

America is a country founded on the idea of a participative democratic system. We vote, we send letters to congressmen and we keep tabs on what our government is doing.

Every four years, we even get to choose if we want a new government or if we like the current one. It's an imperfect system, but I like it and it works.

ALEX THE PRETTY GOOD

The ability to create these petitions is part of the Obama Administration's attempt to allow citizens to continue their participation – or end it completely, if you signed the petition.

As is current policy, the White House says it will review and respond to petitions that obtain more than 25,000 signatures. Three petitions from Texas, Louisiana and Florida have passed that threshold. Texas being Texas leads all petitions, with 82,799 online signatures, a number sure to have increased by the time this column goes to print.

This is trolling. Sure, there might be a few sincere nuts mixed in, but their impact is negligible.

To illustrate how easy it is to make one of these petitions – and how little serious attention they deserve – consider this: I just made a petition to make myself the Secretary of Tacos.

The process for doing this is simple. Go to petitions.whitehouse.gov. Create a petition.

Give it a headline, an explanation and put it in some categories. I put mine in the categories of Agriculture, Consumer Protections and Women's Issues. If you would like to sign this petition, which I highly encourage, you can simply follow go to this web address: <http://wh.gov/X3Av>.

What can we conclude from this? First, you don't need to worry about states actually trying to secede. It's not going to happen. Second, democracy is awesome, and you should sign the petition to make me the Secretary of Tacos.

5 people to be thankful you're not

One of my favorite Thanksgiving traditions is going around the table and sharing what we are thankful for. Most times, we opt for cliché thankfulness or the witty/tacky response for a little sympathetic laugh. This year, we should be really thankful we aren't these people.

5. David Petraeus

It's bad that he's involved in a sex scandal, but it's worse that the whole world now knows the director of the CIA cannot even keep his own emails a secret. In essence, anonymous Georgia Southern University Twitter parodies have just about the same secrecy as Petraeus' pseudonymous Gmail accounts.

4. A door greeter stampede into retail stores acting like ungrateful animals at odd hours of the night. Those door greeters put themselves on the front line just to offer a kind "hello" to visitors. Bless their hearts.

3. Joe Biden

Biden is just as shocked with the election outcome as Fox news. Judging by the vice presidential debate, he too thought it was funny he was running for VP again. Homeboy was prepared to put his house shoes on and walk into a retirement filled with cartoons and teeth whitening treatments. Instead, he's walking into the White House for four more years.

2. A Sesame Street character

Between Big Bird's mention in the presidential debate to Elmo's illegal relationship accusation, it's fair to say 2012 was not their year. Here's to 2013!

Athletic fees approved, green fee awaits process

BY PHYLICIA GALLMON

The George-Anne contributor

The Georgia Board of Regents gave its stamp of approval for the Football Bowl Subdivision move up as well as the stadium expansion, but the sustainability fee will have to wait for review in December.

"We are extremely grateful to the university system of Georgia and to the Board of Regents for their guidance and support during this process. An overwhelming majority of our students voted to support these fees this fall, and we could not be more pleased with today's approval," President Brooks Keel said in a news release.

"I have said it before, and I'll say it again, whether it is in the area of academics, research, sustainability, economic development or athletics, our goal is to take Georgia Southern University to the next level," Keel said.

Athletic Fees Pushed Through

With the possibility of an invitation on the horizon, the submission process was accelerated for the FBS and expansion fees, Christian Flathman, Georgia Southern University assistant vice president of marketing and communication, said.

Without the expectation of an FBS invitation, the fees would not have been submitted until December, Flathman said.

"The FBS and stadium fees were submitted under a special early review this month," Flathman said.

The FBS move-up fee won't take affect until GSU receives and accepts an invitation from a FBS conference. The $75 fee will be charged to students the first full semester after moving up according to a news release by GSU.

The stadium expansion fee of $25 will go into effect next fall and add 6,300 new seats to Allen E. Paulson stadium. As soon as construction is completed, the fee would no longer be in effect, according to a news release.

Green Fee Awaits Review

The $10 sustainability fee will go before the Board of Regents through the normal procedures of submission.

"The sustainability fees have to go through the regular process in order to be approved by the Board of Regents," Flathman said.

The regular submission process to the Georgia Board of Regents does not take place until December, and the proposal for the fee will not be reviewed until April, Flathman said.

74.4 percent of the 9,390 students who voted supported the sustainability fee, which were the most student votes for any of the three fees.

$15 Athletic Fee Redirected

The Georgia Board of Regents approved diverting $15 of the $150 athletic fee that is already in place to build a Football Operations Center, according to a news release by GSU.

The new facility will provide coaches' offices, team meeting rooms, locker rooms, rehabilitation rooms, weight room and the GSU football Hall of Fame.

David Smith, senior sports management major said, "The expansion of the stadium gives alumni and future alumni something to look forward to and a reason to come back to the university."

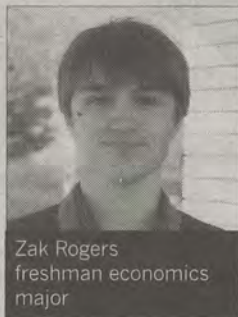

Students reflect on Regents' approval of fees

Georgia Southern University announced Tuesday that The Board of Regents approved the Athletic Operations Fee and Athletic Expansion Fee, which were proposed earlier this month. The Sustainability fee is not set to move on to The Board of Regents until December. The following are student reactions to the announcement:

BB&T Banking gives $500,000

BY LINDSAY GASKINS

The George-Anne staff

BB&T Banking donated $500,000 to Georgia Southern University to establish the BB&T Executive in Residence, which will provide guidance to legislatures on banking policy.

GSU will hold a Corporation Signing Ceremony today.

BB&T's donation is part of Georgia's Eminent Scholars Program that helps bring the best faculty to the university system of Georgia institutions, according to the news release.

The $500,000 donation will serve as objective resource for legislators in addressing policy issues faced by rural community banks.

This program will expand GSU's services to rural based community credit unions. GSU will provide strategic planning and pricing support to rural institutions.

The signing ceremony will be held at the President's Conference Room in the Marvin Pittman Administration Building at 1 p.m.

GSU raises nearly $4,000 for Empty Bowl Project

BY LAUREN GORLA

The George-Anne contributor

Georgia Southern University announced Tuesday that students helped raise nearly $4,000 in support of the Statesboro Food Bank by buying bowls of chili on Oct. 18 during the Empty Bowl Project.

"The sale was a great success. This is the largest amount that this event has ever raised, and I am proud of the students for their hard work," Jeff Schmuki, project coordinator and ceramics professor, said.

The Empty Bowl Project is held every year in conjunction with the Betty Foy Sanders Department of art's annual chili bowl sale, according to a news release.

Ceramics students made bowls and sold each bowl filled with chili for a $10 donation. Buyers were able to enjoy the chili and keep the bowl as a reminder of those in need.

"This project is about those less fortunate, and the larger picture is that it takes the community coming together to make a difference and solve issues like hunger," Schmuki said.

The money raised was given to the Statesboro Food Bank to help those in the Statesboro and surrounding areas who cannot fully provide for their family, according to the news release.

The money will be used to purchase more than 18,000 cans of food, which is a two-month supply of food for the Statesboro Food Bank.

"This is, I believe, the largest single donation ever made to the Statesboro Food Bank," Joe Bill Brannon, operations director of the Statesboro Food Bank, said.

The Statesboro Food Bank is the largest food supplier in our area and is also used to help surrounding counties, Brannon said.

Brannon said, "Not another county near us can come close to what we have at the Statesboro Food Bank, and much of that is thanks to Georgia Southern University."

How to: Bar hopping in Athens

BY MARISSA MARTIN

The George-Anne staff

Athens has over 90 bars to choose from, and with student ticket sales sold out, those who want to watch the game outside of the stadium can grab a drink and bump shoulders at the bars.

Before and after the game the bars are pretty busy, and almost every bar will have the game playing, Kaitlin Roden, senior business management major and UGA student, said.

"Athens has the most quintessential bar scene with over 90 bars, and they are all close together. Most of them are lined up on three or four main roads," Roden said.

The bars in Athens differ from the Statesboro scene, and GSU students should be safe but still have a good time, Roden said.

The Georgia Theatre is good place to watch the game, and it's a popular spot in Athens, Roden said.

"The Georgia Theatre is like a music venue with a bar scene, and it plays the game on a huge screen," Roden said. "Athens is known for this theatre, and it's free."

Sideways and Magnolias are a little more chill and have decent drink prices, Roden said.

Jerzees is a new sports bar in Athens with brand new flat screen televisions and state of the art surround sound system, Mitch Jordan, manager of Jerzees, said.

"Wings are our specialty, and we have our Jerzee wings which is a popular here," Jordan said.

"I haven't been back to visit some of my friends that go there, so it will be fun seeing them," Annie Tuggle, senior public relations major, said. "I'm excited to be going to the game and knowing that there are so many other GSU students coming to support as well."

Unlike the College Plaza's bars in Statesboro those who are under 21 won't be able to get in. "Most bars you'll have to be twenty-one years old to get in," Roden said.

Roden and her friends have their favorite bars in downtown Athens, including the Georgia Theatre, Sideways, Magnolias, Jerzees and Silver Dollar.

"Even though all of the bars are close you can't bring open containers out onto the streets or you'll get arrested," Roden said.

Athens is more developed and has more to do than in Statesboro, Will Frame, GSU senior sports management major and Athens local, said.

Frame said, "Use your head, and understand that you can't get away with as much in Athens."

Jazzin' It Up

Unique interpretations of jazz music to swoon Foy

BY WILLIAM PEEBLES

The George-Anne contributor

Tonight at 7:30 three Georgia Southern University student jazz combos will showcase their unique interpretations of jazz standards in the Foy Fine Arts Building.

The Blue, Gold and World Jazz Ensembles will play an hour-long concert under the direction of Tim Kintzinger. Blue Combo and Gold Combo will perform pieces from jazz music's history, including staples such as, "Baby, It's Cold Outside" and "I Want You to Be My Baby." The World Jazz Combo takes a slightly different approach.

"We are not attempting to accurately perform music of any one culture but use the ideas from cultures we have studied as individuals and blend them into one cohesive ensemble," Kintzinger said.

This is the first semester that GSU has boasted a World Jazz Ensemble. Music education student Duane Borba first approached Kintzinger with the idea in March, hoping to explore his own interest of world music and also share this style with GSU.

"Throughout the summer we gave everyone homework. We had everyone listen to different styles of music so that those styles would eventually become part of their actual playing. There's a lot of trial and error involved," Borba said.

"The traditional combos are pretty straight ahead. There haven't

there, but the thing that I'm most proud of is the world jazz combo. Everyone provides input, and trying to make that work for the first time can be very difficult," Kintzinger said.

The aim to diversify the music is a collective effort from the groups. Each ensemble is a small group chosen for their improvisational abilities.

"Small jazz groups really go for precision. With combo, performing the music is really intimate and spontaneous," Julie Whiddon, the ensemble's vocalist, said.

"We approach things together. If someone starts doing something in these groups, the others will follow suit, and that is something that makes it so special. The World Combo is almost solely built on improvisation," Kintzinger said.

Having three separate jazz combos is new for GSU's music department. The interest in joining the group was high this year, and in order to maintain the feel of a traditional jazz combo the students were split into the three groups.

"We had enough personnel to make up three combos. There's no specific hierarchy, just three separate ensembles. The students that are chosen for the ensemble are the most proficient improvisational players that are able to perform in this setting," Kintzinger said.

Originality is the main focus of the ensemble. Even when playing jazz classics, soloists improvise melodies of their own design to showcase their musicianship.

Kintzinger said, "We're taking jazz standards and pushing them to the edge by contorting them to our own sound, not only with nontraditional harmonic material but also by combining nontraditional musical cultures."

"We're taking jazz standards and pushing them to the edge by contorting them to our own sound."

Take a load off calories this Thanksgiving

BY MARISSA MARTIN

The George-Anne Staff

The "everything is okay in moderation" rule of thumb is thrown out the window when it comes time to give thanks at the family table during Thanksgiving.

Over eating may happen throughout Thanksgiving week, and even with all of this eating, the nutrition department at Georgia Southern University knows how to keep it healthy during the holidays.

"If you feel guilty about overeating you need to make a plan and remember that Thanksgiving is about the people, a time to focus on the family and not about the food," Becky Larson, registered dietitian and clinical nutrition professor, said.

Larson offers advice to those looking to not over eat over the holiday.

"A lot of these things are common sense, but people just don't want to think about them," Larson said.

Don't travel to each family members house with the intention on eating a full meal, Larson said.

"Bring a snack to eat in between meals, and don't skip meals because you're more likely going to over eat later," Larson said.

Bring a healthy option to Thanksgiving dinners like roasted vegetables and plan to stick with the healthier dishes, Larson said.

"This holiday is something that comes once a year, and it's pretty unique, so I'm not saying don't eat, but you can say no sometimes," Larson said.

Choosing foods that are seasonal and specific to Thanksgiving will help limit calories like choosing turkey and cranberry sauce instead of the mash potatoes because those are available anytime, Amy Jo Riggs, associate professor of nutrition and food science, said.

"I like to put a healthy spin on classics like using egg whites instead the whole egg, replacing oil with apple sauce or using whole wheat in the stuffing," Riggs said.

"Using small plates and bowls means you'll only take small portions, and with big plates you get lost in extra calories," Larson said.

Drinking alcoholic beverages will add calories that may be forgotten, and they can add a lot when you start drinking mixed drinks, Larson said.

"Be reasonable in portion sizes and try to incorporate more vegetables than starches," Riggs said. "Leftovers can be separated into proper portion sizes."

Drinking plenty of water and eating vegetables will help Thanksgiving issues, Larson said.

Taking time to exercise will help combat all of the extra calories consumed during the holiday, Riggs said.

"The day before and the day after try to work out, take a walk. That will make them feel better about what they eat so they don't feel bad about it," Carson Jones, junior nutrition and food science major, said.

Riggs said, "Don't go to the table starving, and don't leave the table stuffed."

How to Prepare for Your First Job Interview

By: Career Builder
CareerRookie Magazine

Preparing for a first job interview can be daunting, but it's important to remember that you already have many of the needed skills. Draw upon past experience like class presentations, internship interviews or anywhere that you've had to sell yourself to succeed.

Here are six ways to ace your first job interview:

Talk about your internships.

Employers take your summer internships seriously, so it's take time to stress the specifics of what you've learned. If you haven't landed an internship, spend time on a consulting assignment, temp agency employment or internship after graduation to get some real world experience.

Understand required skills.

Simply reading the job title before applying for an open position is not enough. Go beyond to truly study what kind of skills are needed for a successful applicant

Prepare closing questions.

When given an opportunity to ask questions of your potential employer, make sure you're prepared with something that is thoughtful and can help you stand out.

Cite examples. Ways you've demonstrated leadership is another common area where an employer will want to hear your story.

Keep details in mind. To really land the job it's important to be well-prepared and on time.

Be courteous to non-interviewers. Even if the front desk person or intern at the company looks like they have no pull, there's a large chance you could be wrong.

To practice mock interviews, please log onto you Eagle Career Net account or call the Office of Career Services at 912.478.5197 to schedule an appointment today!

Monken: 'I never imagined doing anything else'

Head coach has helped Eagles soar since returning to Paulson in 2010

BY KEVIN GREGAN

The George-Anne staff

Head coach Jeff Monken is often seen as the man who helped restore Georgia Southern University football to prominence, but many people don't know what made him the right man to do the job.

Since taking command as head coach, Jeff Monken has led the Eagles to 29-10 record, a Southern Conference championship and back-to-back Football Championship Subdivision semifinal appearances.

The son of a head football coach from the suburbs of Chicago, Monken was born into the game. Not only was his father a head coach, but so were his four uncles. From there, Monken, his brother and five cousins all went on to be head football coaches too.

"I just never imagined doing anything else. I saw what a tremendous impact they had on young people and the communities where they lived, the young people that they worked with and their families. I think that's what got all of us into coaching, certainly me," Monken said.

Since the time he was 8 years old Monken was at the school where his dad coached, handing out water and fixing up the equipment. It comes as no surprise that his favorite football memory would be playing for his dad.

"It was just a fabulous feeling to be out there with him every day as a player, be coached by my dad and be out there on Friday nights with my dad. It was great," Monken said.

Over the years, Monken learned a lot from his dad, not just about football but also about life.

"My dad's emphasis was on effort, trying hard, hustling and being the best you could be," Monken said.

"I really appreciate the fact that he instilled those values in me, and I think it helps me be a better coach. Those are the things that are important to me," Monken said.

Monken's parents continue to be very supportive of the coaching tradition in the family. Every Friday night they go and watch Monken's brother coach in Illinois, then drive all night and into the morning to get to the Eagle games on Saturdays. They haven't missed any this season.

After playing wide receiver at Millikin University, Monken went on to start his college-coaching career as a running back coach in 1997 under his mentor and former GSU head coach Paul Johnson.

From there, Monken, Johnson and the Eagles would go 62-10 and win two FCS national championships (1999, 2000).

During those years, everything was going good for Monken, not only on the football field but also off of it. In 2000, he met his wife Beth who has supported him along his journey.

Johnson left GSU to coach Navy in 2002, and as a member of his staff, Monken went with him to coach the triple-option there. When Johnson got the head coaching job at the Georgia Institute of Technology in 2008, Monken and his family came back to Georgia.

In 2010, Monken and his wife were happy to move back to Statesboro, a place he had created so many great memories at and where he would get his first opportunity to be a head coach, he said.

"She's extremely supportive and wanted to see me have that opportunity," Monken said.

In his free time, Monken is the ultimate family man. He has three girls who go to all the games. One is nine, one is four and the last but not least is one year old.

"I spoil them rotten, as every daddy should," Monken said.

It doesn't matter to Monken what he does with his girls, whether it be going to Eagle baseball games or just going out around town. Family is very important to him.

"Every moment I have, I want to spend it with my family," Monken said. "I like doing anything I can with them. If I had a hobby I guess that'd be my hobby."

During his tenure here at GSU, Monken has a lot of positive memories, but his favorite was beating App. State in overtime in 2010.

"We were 4-4 at the time, and I think a lot of people had counted us out. That team was such a special team. We needed something to happen for us to show those guys that all the effort we were putting in was going to make a difference," Monken said.

Monken and his staff must be doing something right because since then, the Eagles have been the favorites to win the SoCon each year.

"We've got a great staff. It's the best coaching staff I've ever been a part of. Our coaches genuinely like each other, enjoy coming to work together and spending time together," Monken said. "Not only are they good football coaches, but they care about these kids and put them first."

Sizing up to a renowned powerhouse of a football team, the Georgia Southern University Eagles have the challenge of overcoming a more advanced team ahead of them if they wish to succeed this weekend against the University of Georgia Bulldogs.

Winning or losing this game will still give the Eagles a spot in the playoffs, but head coach Jeff Monken says that this game will be challenging but no different from any other game.

"It's not the first time we have been out done in athleticism, size and speed, so UGA will be no different," Monken said.

"Going into the season we always play one FBS game, and we will just go in this week and prepare to play a good team," junior quarterback Jerick McKinnon said.

One of the biggest obstacles that GSU will run into is UGA's All-American junior outside linebacker Jarvis Jones.

Jones is one of the Bulldog's top defensive leaders with 56 tackles, 10.5 sacks and five forced fumbles.

"They are one of the best teams in the country, and to beat a team like that will take a perfect effort. I believe with fundamentals and execution, it can be done," Monken said.

The GSU defense will also have to face off against the famous Bulldog starting quarterback Aaron Murray. Murray has posted high statistics all around the board, except in the rushing category. The Bulldog quarterback has actually rushed for -40 yards on the season. However, his passing yardage makes up for his rushing yardage loss. Murray has racked up a total of 2,656 passing yards and is averaging 261.6 yards per game.

"To play the University of Georgia will be a great privilege, and it has always been a dream for everyone to play on national television," senior safety J.J. Wilcox said.

Monken said, "A lot of people believe in this football team. I believe in this football team, and we are going to finish out with determination."

“ It's not the first time we have been out done in athleticism, size and speed, so UGA will be no different. ”

Eagles step into deadly arena

Yes, ladies and gentlemen, it's that time again where the Eagles are scheduled to do battle against a top notch FBS football team—the University of Georgia Bulldogs.

The Eagles have done a pretty decent job in their conference this year, the Bulldogs as well. But this weekend, one team has to face defeat, and I believe that it will be the Eagles, unfortunately.

The fact is that UGA has a bigger, stronger and more agile team than GSU, and there's no way that the Athens squad is going to let up just because they are playing a smaller division team on the second-to-last game of the regular season.

Compared to GSU, UGA has a much stronger and more experienced quarterback who is able to maximize his passing yardage every game. Aaron Murray, so far, has over 2,500 yards passing on the season and averages over 200 yards per game. Although he's in the negative in rushing yards, he still dominates on the field with that powerful arm.

The interesting aspect in this game, though, is that both team's quarterbacks have their strong and weak points. The Eagles aren't too strong in the air, and the Bulldogs aren't too great on the ground.

As we all know, there are a multitude of UGA fans here the 'Boro, and I'm curious to see which way those double-dipping fans swing this weekend.

Whichever team they choose to support is up to them, but at the end of the day I can see the Eagles falling to the Bulldogs 45-28.

Eagles don't match up vs. UGA

This year, the Eagles get the rare chance to prove they're the best football team in the state of Georgia.

Unfortunately, they won't prove that this year.

The Eagles aren't going down without a fight, and No. 5 FBS ranked UGA will certainly have to work hard to shut down the No. 1 ranked rushing offense in the Football Championship Subdivision.

Monken's triple option will face a tough defense led by All-American outside linebacker Jarvis Jones, who has 17 tackles for loss, 10.5 sacks and five forced fumbles.

Head coach Jeff Monken has undoubtedly studied a lot of UGA tape, and he and his staff will give the Eagles the best possible chance to win with the personnel that GSU has.

Many coaches would choose to try to hold onto the ball to keep the ball out of the hands of the UGA offense, led by quarterback Aaron Murray. UGA is ranked second in the nation in three-and-outs, and that could be hard for GSU.

IMPRESSIONKEVIN GREGAN

Once the ball is in the hands of the Bulldog offense, the Eagles will have a tough time defending the pass. Earlier in the season, Appalachian State University tore up the GSU secondary. The Eagles simply don't have the personnel to match up against the UGA receivers.

If the Eagles win, it will be certainly be a moment of glory for the university and Eagle Nation. Anything is possible in college football, after all.

With the way the two teams match up, the Bulldogs will be victorious 45-28. But, you never know, maybe it is that year.

Feathers and fur to battle between the hedges

A battle of teeth and talons is set to occur Saturday as the Georgia Southern University Eagles take on the University of Georgia Bulldogs in a game that only goes down once every four years.

GSU's tradition of playing one FBS opponent has landed them with a date with the No. 5 ranked UGA in Athens this Saturday.

Although this game doesn't affect either school's records because they are in different divisions, this is a key game for the Eagles.

Last season GSU played the University of Alabama in Tuscaloosa for its FBS game of the season. The Eagles scored 21 points against the Crimson Tide defense, which was the most points scored on them all season by any team. The Eagles also managed to rack up 302 rushing yards on the Crimson Tides top ranked rush defense.

This game will be the fifth meeting of the state rivals. The last time they played was in 2008 and UGA came out on top by a score of 45-21. UGA has won every single time the schools have played, winning by a margin of around 24 points per contest.

GSU comes into the game after winning its Homecoming game by a score of 69-26 against Howard University.

UGA is coming off a shutout win against conference rival Auburn University by a margin of 38-0.

UGA key players to watch for:

Junior outside linebacker Jarvis Jones is the number two overall rated player for the upcoming NFL draft. This season he leads the Bulldogs with 17 tackles for a loss, 10.5 sacks and five forced fumbles while being fourth on the team with 56 tackles.

Freshman running back Todd Gurley has racked up 973 yards on the ground with 11 touchdowns on the season. He is currently third in rushing yards all-time for a UGA freshman.

Senior wide receiver Tavarres King is leading the Bulldogs in receiving yards with 624 and receiving touchdowns with seven.

GSU key players to watch for:

Junior quarterback Jerick McKinnon is coming off a three-rushing, two-passing touchdown performance. He leads the team in rushing with 1,053 yards and has 11 touchdowns, while throwing for 396 yards and five scores.

Sophomore B-back Dominique Swope saw his first action in last week's game in two weeks after a concussion sidelined him with a four carry, 98 yards and two-touchdown performance. Swope has scored 14 times on the ground this year, which is best on the team and has 827 yards rushing this year.

Senior safety J.J. Wilcox is second on the team with 63 tackles and has recorded one interception.

Matchup to watch:

UGA's front seven against GSU's triple option offense. UGA features projected first round draft picks (Jones, John Jenkins and Alec Ogletree). GSU has the best rushing offense in FCS coming in at 401.2 yards per game.

The game will kick off Saturday between the hedges at 1:30 p.m. in Athens.
