Councilman Lewis: 'I was misinterpreted'

By SHAUNTEL HALL

Councilman Gary Lewis's district changed during redistricting so he can represent a minority majority population and Georgia Southern University is no longer in his district.

Lewis's previous district included nine apartment complexes GSU students occupy. In a June council meeting, Lewis asked his constituents if they believed this was fair.

"I was misinterpreted. It's not fair for me not to have a minority majority district," said Lewis.

GSU changes Campus Club to Freedom's Landing

By TJ JACKSON

George-Anne contributor

The new name for Campus Club has been announced after recently being purchased by Georgia Southern University.

The Housing Department has decided to change Campus Club to Freedom's Landing. Vice President of Student Affairs Theresa Thompson announced at last night's Student Government Association meeting.

"Most of you know that the university purchased Campus Club recently and students have renamed it 'Freedom's Landing' and that will be the official name this next year," said Thompson.

Recent SOAR Leaders and current Community Leaders were given the chance to submit potential names for the recently purchased apartment complex.

The contest began this summer and was announced two weeks ago to all the students who participated through email.

"Community Leaders were chosen because they have a lot of housing experience and SOAR leaders have more perspective of the student body," said Vice President of Auxiliary Affairs, Garrett Green.

The student who submitted the new name was recent SOAR Leader Ben McCarty.

McCarty said, "I was thinking about how close the stadium is to Campus Club and I wanted to connect the new residence hall with eagle spirit. I knew the name had to be centered around our mascot."

General education outcomes currently under review by GEC

By TAYLOR COOPER

George-Anne contributor

The general education outcomes will be undergoing a complete review by the General Education Committee, according to last month's Provost Report.

The general education outcomes are the attributes that Georgia Southern University wants its graduates to display to all they encounter. The current outcomes were put in place in 1994, said Dr. Kathy Albertson, associate provost and liaison between the provost and the GEC.

"General education is not core," said Dr. Jake Simons, chairman of the General Education Committee. "General education is what the university wants its students to know so they can distinguish themselves as Georgia Southern graduates."

These reviews were prompted by the freshman retention percentage and the six-year graduation percentage, a little over 80 percent and less than 50 percent, respectively, according to the Provost's Report.

The provost chartered the GEC in the spring to perform the general education outcomes review.

The GEC will assess the effectiveness of the outcomes as they are and determine what needs to change.

"The student today is not the same as the student of 1994," said Albertson.

General education is not just limited to the classroom, said Dr. Ellen Hendrix, assistant professor of writing and linguistics and GEC coordinator.

"Many aspects of campus life expand general education. It can also cover things like student government and clubs," said Hendrix.

The GEC will go over the outcomes and will make the necessary changes.

"We don't directly control the curriculum," Simons said.

"It's not a cookie cutter. Different colleges do it differently," said Albertson.

Students should not expect to see any major changes soon said Simons.

"It will more likely be a change in teaching style," said Simons. "Will you see any significant core curriculum change? No."

Working with the GEC are the Comprehensive Program Review teams.

These two teams, one for undergraduate and another for graduate programs, will evaluate the effectiveness of the courses and departments at GSU.

For undergraduate programs, Dr. Ron Mackinnon is the chair of the committee.

For graduate programs, Dr.

Robert Fernekes is the chairman said Dr. Judith Longfield, instructional services coordinator and advisor to the teams.

"Comprehensive Program Review is what we used to review (the programs and classes), and the acronym really suits it. It's basically what we do for the programs," said Longfield.

Along with CPR, program self-study, which has always been a part of the Continuous Review process, will evaluate the various programs in GSU's courses.

"What's new this year is the formal involvement of the undergraduate and graduate committees in the process in order to fulfill their responsibility of Continuous Review of academic programs," said Fernekes.

The teams use a rubric, which helps faculty make the needed changed to their courses said Fernekes.

In his report, the provost mentions that GSU is currently designated as Doctoral/Research University, DRU, by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching. Another goal of the outcomes review is to move GSU up to a Research University [high activity], RU/H.

The evaluation process is currently underway and expected to be done by fall 2012.

Student safety is priority

The Statesboro Police Department has been cracking down on underage drinking among Georgia Southern University students.

According to Hamilton Brodnax, a bouncer at Rude Rudy's, the police come into the bars and give out minor in possession charges to students with drinks and no over 21 wristbands.

In addition to the crackdown of underage drinking in bars, the county has taken its own procedures to crack down on drunk driving. A grant enacted by The Bulloch Drug and Alcohol council investigates alcohol use through road checks and sobriety checks.

GSU is currently in a period of rapid growth. With 20,000 students and an increase in publicity, a surge in campus and city security is no surprise.

Students may not enjoy the crackdowns on underage drinking and occasional roadblocks, but they are vital to security for university students.

As citizens, it is everyone's duty to follow the law. Regardless of your personal depiction of severity, all laws are meant to be followed and have consequences for not doing so. As GSU continues to grow, so should the security of its capital, the students.

GSU does a good job of patrolling on campus and around various bar areas. This security should also be as stringent in off-campus living areas.

Statesboro police should do more than a random drive through to various apartment complexes.

If security were to increase, it's possible that the number of burglaries or crime would decrease in student's eagle alerts.

As GSU soars to reach new heights, Statesboro police should make it a priority to strengthen student security.

Letters to the Editor

Capitalism is not a part of the economy

Dear Editor,

In the Tuesday issue of the George Anne, Fritz Chapin wrote in an article titled Protestors March to End Capitalism that the protesters currently occupying Wall Street are people committed to "class warfare", who "want the government" to help them "get to the top" when they should be doing this for themselves.

The first glaring fallacy of Fritz's article is the fact that he insists the system he is praising so uncritically is indeed capitalism. Any scholar of economics would readily concede that the economic order that dominates the U.S. at the moment is as remote from capitalism as it has ever been.

The economic order that exists is one shaped by the transnational influence of finance capital. These small concentrations of finance capital, what the protesters call "the 1%", are shielded by an imperial state that invades sovereign countries in order to create "business-friendly" locales for investors.

These same private industries dominate the domestic population by stripping workers of collective bargaining rights, buying candidates in elections, and granting themselves the rights of persons to gain unfair advantage in legal disputes.

To take one uncontroversial fact, was it "capitalism" when the US government decided to rescue the banks from total collapse after they spiraled the economy into the ground through a housing bubble unsupported by any fundamental notions of economic practice?

Remember, these CEO's were bailed out by a system that is radically anti-capitalist. These are the same CEO's that Fritz says will "be able to expand their businesses and hire new workers, take on new projects, and put America back on the road to being prosperous and an economic beacon to the world."

All reputable economic analysts have consistently disproved this ludicrous theory, commonly called "trickle-down economics", from the Economic Policy Institute to Nobel Laureates like Joseph Stiglitz and Paul Krugman.

Furthermore, the so-called job creators on Wall Street are currently drowning in profits, while the national unemployment rate remains unmoved at around 9.1 percent and the unemployment rate in the black community has risen to a staggering 16 percent.

Based on publicly available documents from the protest site, it is made clear that these young people are fighting for an economic order that does not, among other things, "continuously [seek] to strip employees of the right to negotiate for better pay and safer working conditions" or "[outsource] labor and [use] that outsourcing as leverage to cut workers' health care and pay."

The outsourcing of labor is particularly important as this practice was even opposed by the figurehead of Mr. Chapin's beloved system of exploitation.

Chapin's slobbering homage to the wonders of what he calls "the most successful economic model in history," aims not only to distort the vast record of economic history but to trivialize genuine struggles for social justice that are now springing up in this country.

Banks charge for debit card use

This month, many banks including Bank of America, Wells Fargo, Chase, and some local regional banks are going to start charging customers to use their money through a debit card.

Bank of America is now charging $5 to use their debt card monthly while Wells Fargo and Chase are testing a $3 fee monthly for the same service.

This comes amid several regulations on banks regarding how much they can collect from merchants each time someone uses their debit card. The regulation cut that fee in half to only $.24 for an average $38 a transaction which costs banks $8 to $10 billion.

This comes with a ton of criticism from Washington, especially from the left side of the aisle. Democratic lawmakers are trying to pass legislature making it easy for people to leave these "money grabbing" banks without processing fees.

FRITZ CHAPIN

Obama said he was disappointed in banks for padding their profits at the expense of their customers. However, I have to agree with the American Bankers Association that this is just another grab from the government to control private-sector prices.

If the government really wants to help, they need to just back off and let the private sector make money and reinvest it. If people don't want to pay the fee, there are more ways to keep and spend money.

First off, many banks like USAA and PSA are proud to offer free checking accounts. Another way is prepaid debt cards. Pay a one-time charge to actually buy the card and keep putting money on it when you need to.

If the market can sustain these card charges then these charges will stay in place, but if people jump ship from these banks and their debt card programs, then the market will force them to reduce them or get rid of the fees.

At the end of the day, people need to remember that banks are business too. They exist to make money and the way they make money is by us paying for their services and penalties for when we violate the terms of the agreements we make with the bank.

If the government wants to go into public banking let them, but until then we're just going to have to suck it up and pay the fees.

Student Government needs to step up

I've been waiting to hear SGA's response to Dr. Pacelle's removal, but I have yet to hear anything at all from them.

As the 'voice of the students' they haven't done much, at least publicly, to ease our mind that they are at least looking into it. As a former Executive Board member of SGA, I can appreciate the fact that GSU's administration is anything but transparent when it comes to big decisions, but that is partially a product of us not demanding them to be.

When the big news about Veezy came out, we were as shocked as the next student, but instead of issuing a release saying we had just learned of the events and were trying to get answers, we did nothing.

SGA has been presented with another opportunity to show students that they are working as a liaison between the administration and us and voice our concerns to President Keel, but again have not acted. President Standifer meets with President Keel on a weekly basis and has plenty of opportunities to voice student concerns and get answers for us.

Now with SGA having a weekly column, we need to demand more from them. Instead of telling us who is running for homecoming, tell us what you're doing to push the smoking ban on campus. Tell us how you feel about Dr. Pacelle being

I want to hear about something that will impact me as a student and help me better understand what's going on at the university.

I'm extremely disappointed in the lack of transparency in the SGA thus far this year and urge them to reconsider the path of apathy they have been strolling down.

The only publicity SGA has had thus far is their weekly column, which has given us next to no information about what they are actually doing. The only informative pieces were the ones about Constitution Day and fund requests. Where is the information on what SGA is doing to better student life on campus? How are they acting as our voice?

I would like to challenge the organization to really open themselves up to the student body and actually be a voice. A leader isn't defined by the position (s)he holds, but what (s)he does with it.

Roberts is a senior public relations major from Warner Robins, Ga. He ran against Alton Standifer for SGA's presidency in 2011.

Student Access Loan extends application deadline

GSU's Director of Financial Aid: Loan may cause more financial debt for students

By COURTNEY TIELKING

George-Anne contributor

The Georgia Student Finance Commission has extended the application deadline for the Student Access Loan.

This loan is different than many other loans. It has only a 1 percent interest rate, but can only be accepted after every other form of government assistance has been rewarded.

"What makes it different is that it is a supplement loan based on the FAFSA. The interest on a federal loan is about 6 percent, so a 1 percent interest rate would be a dream, but this type of loan is a last resort. Federal loans and parent loans both have to be accepted before this one is considered," said Connie Murphey, Director of Financial Aid.

Georgia Southern University has the most applicants for the loan across the state, but the Georgia Student Finance Commission keeps reopening the application term because not many people are applying, said Murphey.

"They've opened and closed it a few times already. I think this is actually the third time it has been reopened," Murphey said.

"There have been about 5,200 applicants. Of those applicants there have been 1,500 recipients that have received approximately 10 million dollars collectively with this loan. We do have funds remaining though," said Tracy Ireland, Media Contact of the Georgia Student Finance Commission.

Murphey said she thinks the state has good intentions with the loan, but it just is not doing what the government has intended it to do.

"The loan is putting families in debt. We should be giving grants instead of debt upon debt upon debt. My thought is why not do a service grant. The recipient would be required to have a job in Georgia after they graduate to work that money off. It would boost the state's economy," said Murphey.

Some students do not see how the loan is helpful.

"I don't see how this loan helps anyone. If you have to lead up to this loan, that just doesn't make any sense," said Jordan Bailey, sophomore communications studies major.

Choosing who receives the loan is a random process said Ireland.

Ireland said, "The selection is random. It doesn't matter if you apply the first day or the last day. You have the same chance of being chosen as everyone else," said Ireland.

According to a press release, to qualify for the loan, students must be a resident of Georgia, attend an approved college or university and have a 2.0 GPA. The maximum amount students can borrow with this loan is $10,000 with a lifetime maximum of $40,000. Students must pay interest yearly and can delay repayment of the principal amount until graduation.

Broadway in the 'Boro to raise funds for research

BY JAMES MORTON

George-Anne staff

On Saturday, Oct. 8, the Leukemia and Lymphoma Society will host the Broadway in the Boro fundraising event in the Statesboro High School auditorium.

Broadway in the Boro will feature students from Statesboro High School and students who are jointly enrolled in Georgia Southern University.

On Jan. 11, 2011, GSU freshman Logan Chesnut died of leukemia. He was studying mechanical engineering through the Georgia Tech program. Logan requested that his friends register with Be The Match for bone marrow donations.

Statesboro High School culinary arts departments will prepare desserts and several Broadway musical selections will be performed. All proceeds will be donated to the Leukemia and Lymphoma Society (LLS). The event will start at 7 p.m. Tickets are $10 for adults and $5 for children, high school and college students.

"It's an awareness event," said Judi Downs, wife of history professor Dr. Alan Downs and a coordinator for the event. She was diagnosed with chronic myelocytic leukemia 14 years ago.

"It would be great if (students) could do a bone marrow transplant drive," said Judi.

Cancer can affect anyone and research is an important factor for diagnosis and treatment said Judi.

"Lots of people have Leukemia and blood cancers and don't even know it. They are able through research to control many blood cancers," said Judi. "I think cancer concerns everybody, whether you are young or old. It can happen to anyone. I am alive today through the process of medical research."

There are 259, 889 people in the U.S. who are either living with or are in remission from leukemia. Leukemia affects people from all ages including toddlers and the elderly, according to the LLS website.

Many GSU students know someone who has battled leukemia.

"I had a cousin who died from it," said Kaila Bryant, junior exercise science major. "The chemo was really stressful. She was in her early 30s. She was the life of the family; everyone took it really hard."

"My best friend in high school had leukemia, but she beat it. I know it affects a lot of children," said Amie Green junior general studies major.

"Biology is too variable to have no hope. And treatment changes everyday," said Judi.

Judi said, "You realize that you really have to focus on this day, and this moment because really that's all you're promised."

which the majority of the constituents are of minority races according to USLegal, Inc.

A census was conducted in Lewis's previous district that included GSU which showed that his district was no longer a minority majority district, said Lewis.

"This majority minority district was created by the NAACP and the Department of Justice through a lawsuit. Having a majority minority district enabled the city council to have a minority on there," said Lewis. "Before that there were no minorities on city council."

After the census was conducted, Lewis approached the Department of Justice about not having the minority majority district. That is when the redistricting lines were drawn, which moved Lewis's district further north.

"What they did is, they put me up further north in a minority majority district. Now I have 62 percent of the minority district," said Lewis.

Councilman Will Britt now has GSU in his district, although Lewis still has some GSU students in his new district, according to the new district map.

Lewis said Britt and Councilman Travis Chance were trying to turn GSU students against him in the previous article.

"(Britt and Chance) are talking about me saying I don't like Georgia Southern college students," said Lewis. "That is very untrue. I love Georgia Southern students. I have a great relationship with Georgia Southern students."

"I will prevail at the end because I think they are trying to turn Georgia Southern students against me, but you know if God has a say in that, I will be alright," said Lewis.

GSU students play a big role in the Statesboro community said Lewis.

"I have a lot of compassion and concern for the college students. Statesboro would not be what it is today without the college students," said Lewis.

There were students who said they took offense to the previous article, which quoted an audio recording where Lewis had said: "Let me make it plain, I had — out of all the councilmen up here — I had nine student houses on that campus. Does that sound fair to you?"

"I kind of take offense towards it because it does make it seem like he doesn't want us to be a part of his district. He doesn't want to represent us. He is making it seem like we do not matter. We are here. We matter too," said Ketonnja Appling, sophomore justice studies major.

Lewis's remarks will strain the relationship between him and GSU students said Brittani Hill, senior communication arts major.

"I feel like the relationship between Councilman Lewis and the Georgia Southern students that do care about this issue will be strained," said Hill. "Students probably know that he doesn't think highly of them."

"He doesn't respect their vote. He does not consider them active members of the community," said Hill. "And if he wants a vote on your behalf you want to feel a part of the community and that your voice is important."

New admissions video filmed on GSU's campus

By PHARONE PRICE

George-Anne contributor

The Marketing and Communication Office has been filming an admissions video on and around campus in the last few weeks.

Videos are conducted on campus quite often said Director of Marketing and Communication Christian Flathman.

"Each week we have a variety of videos that are filmed on campus whether it be classroom, student or university projects."

Last week's recording was for GSU's admission video said Flathman.

"Last week we were working on an update to the university's admissions video," said Flathman.

"Members of the Southern Ambassadors were interviewed to talk about their experiences at Georgia Southern as they serve as guides for prospective students and their parents when they visit campus," said Flathman.

"The admissions video is the latest project that the office has produced and the last update to an admissions video was nearly three years ago," said Flathman.

Some students were unaware of the recent filming on campus.

"I heard that there were production crews on campus last week but I didn't have a clue what they were shooting," said Brittani Hill, senior communication arts major.

"Later on that week I saw the production crew by Lakeside and the Nursing and Chemistry buildings. I am communication arts major so naturally when I saw the cameras I wanted to inquire more but I didn't," said Hill.

Other students were aware that an admissions video was being taped.

"I have some friends who are Southern Ambassadors and they actually told me why they were being filmed. I think it's awesome that the video will have actual students on it speaking on behalf of GSU," said Jasmine Bradley, senior multimedia communication major.

Eagles prepare for tournament-play

Men's tennis

By OLIVIA CLEMENTS

George-Anne contributor

The Georgia Southern University men's tennis team continues to prepare for its upcoming fall matches this season.

The team will travel to the Elon Invitational this Friday, Oct. 7. Several players have already started out the fall season coming away with wins at their first tournament, the Southern Intercollegiate Championships that was held in Athens, Ga. from Sept. 23-26.

"The team has been conditioning to work on their individual strategies and techniques. Focuses for the fall season are on development," said head coach Nick Zieziula.

The Eagles have a diverse roster of nationality and talent this season.

Freshman player Albert Codina Sala is a native of Spain where he is ranked 192nd in the Spanish Men's National Open for tennis. Codina Sala feels good about his skill level going into the fall season. His strategy is to tire out the opposition by playing "short and safe."

Codina Sala feels good about playing tennis at the collegiate level, even though his goals now differ from competing in tournaments around Barcelona.

"Before I was trying to get points for a professional league and now I just want to work hard and improve my level and see where it leads after college," said Sala.

First-year transfer student Oliver Webb is from London and can appreciate the advantage of practicing with a diverse team.

"Everyone plays different from different countries and it gives you an advantage," said Webb. "Everyone is pushing each other every day to get better and better."

Webb along with fellow player Andrew Dromsky advanced to the semifinals of their doubles bracket at the Southern Intercollegiate Championships earlier this season, defeating opponents from the University of Georgia.

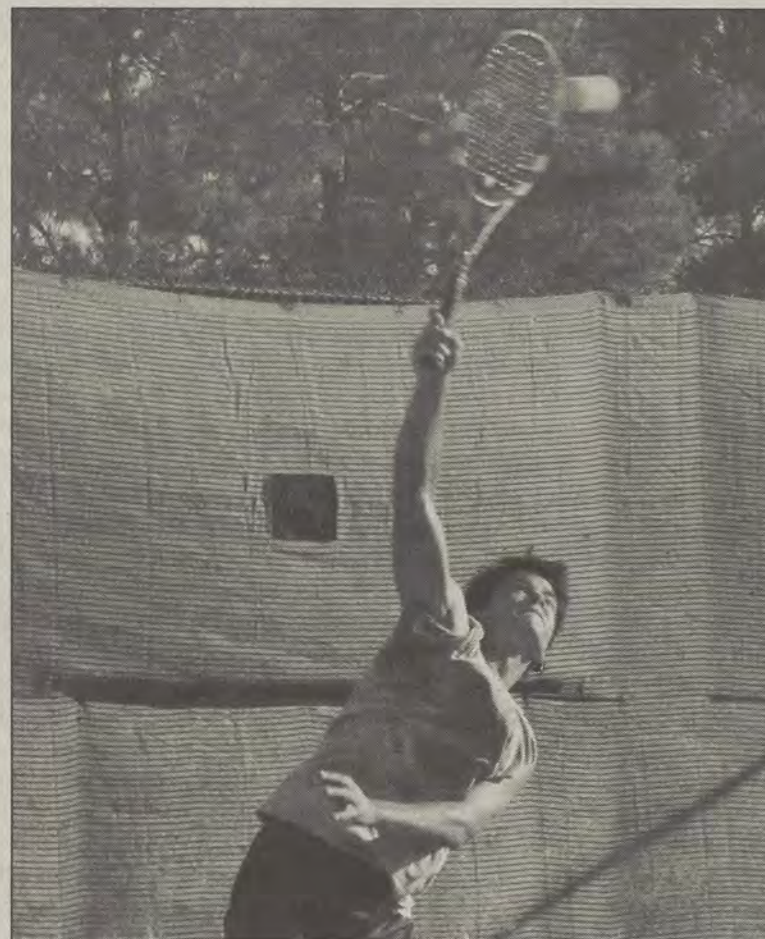

Players have had two weeks of strategic practice to prepare to face opponents at the Elon Invitational this weekend.

Alain Garrido will be traveling with teammates this weekend to North Carolina to compete in both singles and doubles divisions.

According to the Eagles' athletic records, Garrido's current stats for collegiate matches are 14-13 for singles and 9-9 for doubles.

Garrido, from Vigo, Spain, said that it makes his family very proud that he and his sister, fellow GSU athlete Paola Garrido, are competing in tennis at the collegiate level.

Even though most of the players

Jessica Steinfield/STAFF

Albert Codina Sala trains with coach Zieziula in an individual session.

do not have the comfort of an actual family member nearby, Webb appreciates the bond that he and his teammates share.

"People here are really welcoming," said Webb. He said his teammates are

"like brothers."

Volleyball takes North Florida 3 sets to 0

Volleyball

By ANNA WELLS

George-Anne contributor

After a loss on Saturday against the College of Charleston, the Georgia Southern University volleyball team came back full force and defeated North Florida 3 sets to 0, making the Eagles' Southern Conference record 4-1.

The Eagles came out strong in the first set winning with a score of 25-15. That energy carried throughout the rest of the match.

"We came out with a lot of energy and just played really good ball, we played clean and that's what we really need to do," said Kate Van Dyke, a junior setter for the Eagles. Van Dyke recently passed the 3,000 career assist mark.

GSU continued to play strong throughout the match, not allowing North Florida to capitalize on any opportunity. Both Van Dyke and coach Chad Callihan acknowledged that this was a good win for the Eagles after their previous loss.

"I thought we came out strong today," said Van Dyke. "We didn't play our best this weekend, so we were definitely trying to redeem ourselves and get back on the right track."

"I thought it was a good performance. I think the team came out and executed really well, we were pretty down about one of our matches over the weekend and it was nice to come back and respond with a good performance," said Callihan.

Callihan and Van Dyke also agreed that the match helped to get the focus back on the team.

"We took care of a lot of little things, the offense and the defense both played solidly. I thought the score got tight a couple of times, but we responded really well each time," said Callihan after the match.

"We wanted to get back to really concentrating on what we did well, and a little less worried about our opponents and I thought we did that today," Callihan said.

"We mainly just tried to focus on ourselves today, get back to our basics and do the things that we do best," said Van Dyke.

GSU's record at home is 9-2 and they have not lost a home match since Aug. 26. The Eagles continue home play on Saturday at 7 p.m. against SoCon opponent Appalachian State and then again on Tuesday, Oct. 11 at 6 p.m. against Davidson.

Laron Scott is ready to challenge Mocs' Bradford

Football

"I always love a good challenge," said Georgia Southern University's defensive back Laron Scott.

Over the course of his career at GSU, Scott has encountered several of these challenges in his role as a premier defender for the Eagles.

Last week at Elon University, Scott found himself in single coverage against All-American receiver Aaron Mellette. Even though Mellette gained over 100 receiving yards, Scott played a big role holding him to no catches in the second and fourth quarters.

This Saturday, GSU will host the University of Tennessee at Chattanooga, and Scott will be tested again against the statistically No. 2 receiver in terms of catches in the Southern Conference, Joel Bradford. In five games this season, Bradford has averaged seven receptions per game for an average of 12.1 yards per catch.

"He's a really good receiver and a fast guy," Scott said. "Right now, the coaches are trying to put up some good plans, some good coverages, and they expect us to go out there and run the route."

If Scott is once again in single coverage, the match-up could prove to be just as competitive as last week's game at Elon.

Bradford is listed at 6 feet, 165 pounds. Scott is listed at 5-foot-9, 179 pounds. On paper, Saturday's receiver versus cornerback matchup looks to be a classic battle of speed versus power.

"He's definitely going to catch some passes and get some routes in," Scott said. "We just have to hold him down and try to keep it to a minimum."

After holding the Phoenix to 14 points last week in North Carolina, many fans were pleased with the defensive effort. However, Scott feels the team cannot rely on the past if they wish to remain undefeated.

"We still have to do a lot better. As a defensive unit, we feel that this is a big game. These guys really got after us last year, and we feel like we have to go out there and play hard and improve our game," said Scott.

This season, Scott was selected as an All-American player, just as Bradford was. Scott broke the GSU record for kickoff return yards. Bradford recently broke into Chattanooga's top 10 list for receiving yards.

Scott was honored as a SoCon defensive player of week last season, and was a nominee once this season as well. Bradford received the same honors for offense earlier this season.

"I'm going against one of the best. It's definitely going to be a good battle," Scott said. He's going to catch some, I'm going to stop some, and we're just going to see who gets the overall win at the end of the game."

GSU to face second straight pass-heavy team

BY JAMES FARMER

George-Anne staff

The Georgia Southern University football team faces University of Tennessee at Chattanooga this weekend, but won't have to change game plans too much from last week's game against Elon University.

Like Elon, UTC has one of the top passers and receivers in the Southern Conference, and no running back averaging over 50 yards a game.

Historically, GSU is 20-4 all time against UTC, with the last loss coming last year in Tennessee.

Special Teams: UTC ranks fourth in kickoff return, but only ninth in punt return average. Their kicker Nick Pollard is 6-10 this season on field goals with a long of 29 yards. The Mocs have the SoCon's worst net punting game as well.

The Eagles have the second ranked kick return squad in the SoCon, and the nation's second leading return man in Laron Scott. GSU is ranked fourth in punt return average in the SoCon, and first in net punting average. Adrian Mora is 6-6 on field goals and has not missed an extra point in his career.

Stat to watch: 39. The kickoff return average for Laron Scott, second in the nation.

Advantage: GSU

UTC Offense vs. GSU Defense: Chattanooga's offense is ranked eighth in the conference in both scoring and total yards. However, UTC has a dangerous quarterback-wide receiver combination that will remind GSU fans of the Elon game last week.

Mocs' quarterback B.J. Coleman is second in the conference in passing yards, and is third in touchdowns, but has thrown six picks.

His favorite target is wide receiver Joel Bradford, who has caught the second most passes in the conference for the third most yards.

GSU's defense surrenders the most passing yards in the SoCon. However, the defense held Elon's Tyler Wilson to 50 yards below his average and forced him into three interceptions last weekend.

Laron Scott will have to match up against another top receiver in the conference, after facing Aaron Mallette. The UTC offense has given up a SoCon leading 14 sacks through five games, the same number that GSU has recorded in four games.

Stat to watch: 49. The number of passing touchdowns for UTC's Coleman, who is the SoCon's active leader in passing touchdowns and tied for sixth all time.

Advantage: GSU

GSU Offense vs. UTC Offense: The Eagles' offense one of the best in the nation. The third best total offense and best rushing offense in the FCS will face a tough test against the UTC defense, which is the best in the SoCon and sixth nationally overall, as well as fourth in the SoCon against the run.

Jerick McKinnon should play versus UTC, just not as a quarterback due to an injury to his throwing hand.

Jaybo Shaw proved that GSU could do more than just run the ball, throwing three touchdowns on 6-10 passing against Elon last weekend.

The Mocs come into the game with three of the top eight tacklers in the SoCon, led by Wes Dothard, who has been named SoCon defensive player of the week twice in five games. The Mocs match up well against the GSU offense due to their skill in forcing fumbles. UTC has forced 15 fumbles and recovered seven, the same number of fumbles that opponents have forced and recovered versus GSU this season.

UTC gave up 28 points in 21 minutes to the triple-option attack of The Citadel last weekend, to lose the game in the last minutes.

Stat to watch: 90% Opponents are scoring against UTC 90 percent of the time in the redzone, making the Mocs defense the worst in the SoCon.

Advantage: GSU (slightly)

Final Analysis: The Mocs bring in an offensively challenged team to face the number four defense in the SoCon at home. The offense has had difficulties opening games this year, being outscored 31-14 in the first quarter so far. The GSU offense, on the other hand has outscored its opponents 41-14 in the first quarter in one less game than the Mocs.

The Eagles' offense is rolling right now, averaging over 51 points, and 428 yards rushing per game. UTC has one of the best defenses in the nation, and if they play like they did in the first half of last week's game versus The Citadel, it will be a long night for the Eagles. However, weak red zone play versus the best red zone team in the conference could be their undoing.

Stat to watch: 1320. GSU has outrushed its opponents by an amazing 1320 yards in four games this season. UTC's weak running attack will make this margin even larger.

Final Score: 38-10

'F1rst Friday' lends a helping hand to charities

By CHRISTINA WRIGHT
George-Anne contributor

Downtown Statesboro's monthly First Friday will be a night dedicated to United Way and the Statesboro Food Bank.

First Friday occurs the first Friday of every month on Main Street downtown.

It is an evening of strolling the streets of downtown and visiting all the diverse galleries of local and regional artists.

The galleries offer refreshments as well as original artwork. Live music and street performers provide entertainment throughout the night, as well as vendors and other activities. The event is free and open to the public.

The theme for this coming First Friday is "Care on the Square".

United Way is the main host and focus of the event and most proceeds go towards them.

Coca-Cola is also one of their huge sponsors. On that night there will also be a food drive to benefit the Statesboro Food Bank.

The food drive will be in collaboration with a food drive at Paulson Stadium at the October 8th home football game tag lined "Get Your Cans on the Bus".

There, they will be collecting cans and monetary donations for the food bank.

"This is a meant to be a fun carefree night for families and students. We've had a great turnout over the last year and look forward to seeing more people," said Elena McLendon, the office manager and event coordinator of the Downtown Statesboro Development Authority.

"We love for Georgia Southern students to come out. We know that students usually do not come to downtown very often so we think this is a great way for them to see what we have to offer," said Allen Muldrew, director of the DSDA.

All First Fridays have vendors and drawings for chances to win different items. Galleries and stores along downtown open their doors and put out appetizers to attract customers.

"It usually ends around 9 p.m., so college students can still come and go out after."

Downtown Statesboro offers multiple events throughout the fall, but one that they look most forward to is "Scare on the Square", taking place around Halloween.

Events include a costume contest, a haunted house, haunted hay rides, and a scarecrow contest with a first place prize of $1,000 in advertising for the company or organization of your choice.

Their biggest event is a flash mob dance to Michael Jackson's "Thriller." They plan on making a music video to put on YouTube.

Anyone can attend practices for the show and actually walk the streets with other zombies on the night of the street dance.

"My mom and I have gone to First Friday a lot together and it's always a lot of fun," said senior psychology major Kelli Rushing.

Dr. Brent Wolves, a professor at GSU, is having one of his classes participate in the haunted hayrides and dress up for the event.

McLendon said, "We are so excited to see more students participating and welcome any student organizations to join as well."

First Friday takes place on the courthouse lawn and extends all through the downtown area. The event runs from 5:30 p.m. until 8 p.m. and is free to everyone.

The Buzz List

- Snoop Dogg is going to star in a sitcom about a father with a bunch of misfit kids.

Julia Welch

- Steve Jobs died last night. Millions of graphic geeks and Adobe nerds just had their hearts broken. Apple even redesigned their site with a full page dedicated to a black and white of Steve. Even dead, he manages to keep Apple monochromatic.

- Sarah Palin announced that she isn't running for the presidency. Apparently being a reality star is better than being president now.

- Disney is turning a few more classics into 3D following "The Lion King" that just had an $80 million box office success. Best idea yet is a 3D Boo and Sully from "Monsters, Inc." Cuteness just got an upgrade.

Landing that dream job is the goal of nearly every college student, yet with the tough economy it is difficult to do. Career Services is here to help you learn how to become a successful student and ultimately, outstanding professional.

There are several factors to consider before beginning the application or interview process. To begin, it is absolutely vital to have your cover letter and resume up-to-date. Career Services offers free cover letter and resume critiques to ensure that both are flawless so that you are confident in the final product.

Optimal Resume, our resume and cover letter formatting program, is an easy way to begin drafting your documents.

The next step is to conduct company research to figure out exactly what the company is looking for in an employee and whether it is the right company for you. Doing so will allow you to stand out against other applicants.

In addition, to make a positive and lasting first impression on the employer, you have to dress the part. Dressing like a professional will make you feel more comfortable and cause others to view you as a professional who is already a part of the office.

Another service to take advantage of is our free mock interviews. You can set up an appointment by simply calling Career Services. This way, you will be better prepared to answer the tougher questions that employers might throw your way.

Anna-Marie Thompson, a junior management and marketing major, received a job offer after following each of these steps. Thompson also visited the Career Services website - www.georgiasouthern.edu/career - to take advantage of the Optimal Resume program.

Additional information concerning interviews can be found on Career Services website.

"If you are nervous about getting a job, then Career Services can definitely help you out," Thompson said. "It had been a while since I went for a job interview, so it was nice to have information readily available on the website for me to review before my own interview."

Make the most of your interview by preparing yourself accordingly with Career Services in the Williams Center.

For more information, call Career Services at (912) 478-5197 or visit www.georgiasouthern.edu/career.

Results are in for possible spring semester performers

By QUANIQUA EPPS

The results from an university wide voting has been revealed.

The 15 bands that made up the list of possible performers for the spring semester concert this year on the Georgia Southern University campus has been narrowed down to two artists.

Voting on the acts was conducted through a poll on Org Sync, through Ga Veiw. All students and staff could vote.

Bruno Mars and "The Band Perry" may be performing on campus in two seperate events.

"If we can get these two together, what's going to happen for the first time, is that we are going to have people who want to see Bruno Mars go and buy tickets to see him. Those who want to see 'The Band Perry' can go buy tickets to see them," said Teresa Thompson, vice-president of student affairs.

One band or both may play depending on the availability of artists.

"This will not only bring a variety of artists to campus, it will also help generate funds," siad Thompson.

Eagle Entertainment will be setting up for the performances and hosting them.

Ceaser Rodriguez, senior marketing major and president of Eagle Entertainment said, "We want to bring events to students, but want their input about who they want to see."

The two finalist were annouced at last night's SGA meeting. Although Eagle Entertainment usually hosts the entertainment events around campus, the final decision will be up to a committee of members from the Office of Student Affairs.

"I started here at GSU over seven years ago, and a lot of students asked me about having concerts," said Thompson.

Past concerts like last year's Ludacris show and O.A.R's appearance before them have always served as a semester milestone.

The concerts usually occur during the fall semester, but spring seemed the best choice this year.

The extra time to coordinate the event may be the key to actually having two concerts from two major label artists perform on campus this year.

GSU Idol opens up auditions

By GIANNA CARME

Auditions begin tonight for the annual GSU Idol and are open for any student to compete.

GSU Idol, a singing competition modeled after American Idol, was brought to campus by SGA to help raise money to benefit the United Way Campaign.

The campaign that promotes financial stability, health concerns and raises money for the Statesboro community.

Judges will choose students based on vocal performance, range, and showmanship. Students may choose to sing acapella or with music.

For students who choose to bring their music to the audition, a connection for iPods will be available.

"We are looking for raw talent," said junior public relations major Christina Belge, who also serves as Vice President of Academic Affairs. "If you can sing you should audition."

During the event, taking place on Nov. 2 at 6:30 p.m., contestants will be judged by the same criteria in addition to audience participation.

"Last year the audience completely decided on the winner, but this year it will be a 60/40 decision," said Belge.

The GSU Idol competitors that make it through each set will be chosen by judges for the first two rounds in the competition, but the final three rounds will be based on audience votes.

The first one is People's Choice, which is the audience's favorite contestant. The second title is Miracle Maker, the contestant who raises the most money during the event and ticket selling process.

Although the audition process happens this week, students won't get to see the actual event until homecoming week.

"Since the event is right before Homecoming, students may receive points for their organizations by attending GSU Idol," said Belge.

All proceeds from GSU Idol will go toward the United Way Campaign for Statesboro.

Auditions will be held this evening at 6 p.m. in Russell Union room 2044 and Monday, Oct.10 at 6 p.m. in Russell Union room 2084.

Stompfest cranks out another step show for 800 people

By QUANIQUA EPPS

The performing arts center was filled with Georgia Southern University students, Statesboro residents and other students from surrounding universities as the NAACP hosted their second annual Greek step show 'Stompfest'.

Several different acts took to the main stage as sororities, fraternities and dance groups performed their steps, dances and strolls for a packed house of over 800 people.

"The idea was brought to me from a friend and it seemed like a good idea to bring our NPHC Greeks and the student body together to showcase to the student body the talent of our NPHC Greeks," said senior health education and promotion major Rosalind DeShazo who is also the president of NAACP.

The show kicked off with an interpretive dance set from the African Student Association that showed the origins of dance and step. Shortly afterwards a Greek roll call was taken of the fraternities and sororities in the divine nine who were in attendance at the show. After the roll call was taken the hosts for the event junior communication studies major Alakia Williams and senior communication arts major Thomas Lewis were introduced to the audience.

The competition began as the men of the GSU Xi Tau chapter of Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity performed first by doing a stroll.

After the Alphas finished their set, the ladies of the GSU Xi Eta chapter of Delta Sigma Theta took to the stage in their military combat gear and performed.

The audience saw the GSU dance team, Euphoria, perform followed by musical act Z

Stompfest contestants, Delta Sigma Theta, got aggressive in their step performance. Over 800 people showed up to watch the different fraternities and sororities to show their dedication and stomp skills.

Hundred who crooned to the female audience members.

A video message appeared from former GSU Idol LaJon apologizing for not being in attendance.

The next competitor to the stage were the men of the GSU Omicron Phi chapter of Kappa Alpha Psi, the performance was a combination of stroll, dance and step.

Dyversionz dance team took to the stage to perform an energetic set of dance moves that got the crowd involved.

"The show definitely exceeded my expectations, I didn't think it was going to be sold out, the success of Stompfest 2011 really pleased me," said DeShazo.

The show was brought to an end as the men of the Claflin University Omicron chapter of Phi Beta Sigma took to the stage and had a performance that paid homage to all female sororities of the divine nine.

"I thought the show was a major success, not only were there not any dull moments, It was very entertaining, and gave us a chance to see the ability and talent that the NPHC Greeks have," said sophomore public relations major Melika Hill.

When the results were announced GSU took home first place for the males and females. The ladies of the Xi Eta chapter of Delta Sigma Theta were announced the female winners. The Omicron Phi chapter of Kappa Alpha Psi were crowned winners for the males.
