Clubhouse to offer alcohol

BY TANNIS KUFNER

The George-Anne contributor

The Clubhouse of Statesboro is planning to expand its bar area and will begin serving alcohol in the fall.

The Clubhouse possesses a license to sell beer and wine, and with the addition of a new bar area, the owners hope to boost business and bring in a new clientele on a larger market, Dr. Darin Van Tassell, owner of The Clubhouse and international studies professor at Georgia Southern University, said.

"We are at the point where we want to up our game on the food and beverage side," Van Tassell said.

The Clubhouse wants to draw in a new crowd of business by creating a new

GSU awaits green light for shooting range

Georgia Southern University administrators will go before the Board of Regents in August for approval to build an almost $6 million shooting and archery center, and they expect a unanimous "yes."

If the green light is given, that construction of the Shooting Sports Center will begin this October and be completed by January 2015, Teresa Thompson, vice president of Student Affairs, said.

"[The Board of Regents members] have voiced 16 to zero that they are completely for it," Thompson said. "We have had tremendous support from the Board of Regents in this because shooting sports is one of the fastest growing sports in America."

GSU has already received the $5,831,000 required to build the Shooting Sports Center.

The Department of Natural Resources (DNR) contributed three times more than any other donor with $3.3 million. Approximately $1.5 million came from GSU in the form of a combination of leftover money from student recreation fees and surplus institutional funds.

DNR is using money from taxes on gun and ammunition sales to contribute its portion, Thompson said.

Originally, the indoor portion of the facility was designed for a total of 16 lanes, eight for archery and eight for gun shooting.

GSU professor to research in Netherlands

BY GABY BENNETT

The George-Anne contributor

Larry Griffin, Ph.D., director of American Studies and College of Liberal Arts and Social Sciences research professor, was awarded a scholarship to study in the Netherlands this fall.

Griffin was awarded the Fulbright Distinguished Research Chair in January. The prestigious award is only given to scholars with significant experience and published research in their fields.

"When I found out that I had been awarded a distinguished chair, I was really very pleased and excited," Griffin said. "It's a relatively rare accomplishment, and it's one that I value deeply."

Being a part of the Fulbright program will also allow Griffin to

I'm really looking forward to being there with these scholars and talking about these ideas, learning about their culture and giving them a sense – or my sense – of my culture or our cultures that make up the American culture.

- Dr. Larry Griffin,

Director of American Studies and CLASS research professor teach his students more effectively once he returns to GSU after the 2013 fall semester.

"I'm going to have a perspective in the future that I don't have right now," Griffin said. "I will have a much better sense of how we are perceived [in the Netherlands] and I can use their perceptions of the U.S. to inform our students here about America's role in the world and how other folks view us."

Griffin's research on the American identity focuses on what American citizens believe to be true American qualities and who they consider to be "real Americans."

At the Roosevelt Study Center in the Netherlands, Griffin will be able to compare his findings on an international scale and start to understand how other countries perceive Americans.

"I'm really looking forward to being there with these scholars and talking about these ideas, learning about their culture and giving them a sense – or my sense – of my culture or our cultures that make up the American culture," Griffin said.

The idea of the American identity is an important idea to understand because the U.S. is a now changing country, Griffin said.

By being a Fulbright Scholar, Griffin will gain experience and knowledge that could help the university understand the American identity.

"I think this is really important over academic or theoretical matters," Griffin said. "I think a lot of Americans, and I suspect a lot of folks in other cultures, are having to make sense out of a world that is very different."

Staff council filters out campus smoking

BY CYDNEY LONG

The George-Anne staff

The Georgia Southern University Staff Council held a town meeting yesterday to address employee concerns.

The Staff Council is working to make the GSU campus tobacco-free.

The current GSU policy on smoking prohibits smoking in all campus buildings.

The Faculty Senate discussed establishing a tobacco-free campus in April where America Minc, CRI director and staff council member, discussed the results of a survey regarding campus-wide tobacco policies.

The Council also discussed vacant positions, employee wellness and health benefits. Signs have been posted around campus prohibiting smoking within 25 feet of building entrances, Paul Michaud, staff council advisor and associate vice president of human resources, said.

The Council is working with the Faculty Senate to promote awareness of the effects of using tobacco.

Our View

Forest Drive needs to be renovated

With the biology building set to be open in July, Georgia Southern University has seen much needed improvements to a building that was an obvious eyesore on campus. The new biology building will allow for the department to implement new teaching styles and a more hands-on approach in both the labs and classrooms. This building was a necessary step in expanding the biology department, however, the university needs to look at other buildings on campus that are in dire need of improvements or expansion.

The Forest Drive Building was originally planned to be a temporary facility, but after the addition of landscaping and sidewalks, it seems that the building has become more permanent. The Forest Drive Building is home to history and foreign language departments, the international studies department, and the writing center. Forest Drive is a cramped building that needs to be remodeled in order to cater to the needs of the various majors and departments.

The majority of freshmen have to take core classes in the Forest Drive Building, such as world history and basic foreign language classes, and this building is not one that would impress them and make them excited about their classes at GSU. In addition, the Forest Drive Building is home to the international studies department, and with its cramped hallways and unattractive exterior, this building again is surely not one that would make international studies students feel at home at GSU. The university needs to make improvements on the Forest Drive Building in order to make our university the best it can be.

Media sways opinion in Martin case

The trial of George Zimmerman began earlier this week, and with it came the expected media firestorm. Who could have imagined that the Trayvon Martin case would have generated this sort of interest from the media? There have been several pictures painted of the accused George Zimmerman; some news outlets have described him as a cold-hearted murderer, while others see him as a victim free of all blame.

Regardless of which stance you take, it is important to take into account facts that are not often projected through the media. Zimmerman's unedited 911 call proves that he originally phoned the police in order to alert them to suspicious activity. It is hard to believe that Zimmerman had a pre-organized plan to stalk down and kill Trayvon Martin if he first alerted the police to Martin's presence. Secondly, there was a scuffle that took place between Martin and Zimmerman that was originally ignored by the media. Medical evidence proves that Zimmerman did suffer a fractured nose and cuts on the back of his head, so it is hard to justify the fact that Martin was just a victim and nothing more. That being said, it is also almost impossible to support the idea that Zimmerman is guilty of blame as well. Martin was a 17-year old male, and Zimmerman at the time was 28 years old. It seems hard to believe that Zimmerman was unable to find some other method to stop Martin, and his last line of defense was to use his firearm.

LIVIN' IN THE SOUTH

Neither Zimmerman nor Martin had the greatest track record. Martin was suspended from school numerous times and caught with marijuana, but Zimmerman was also arrested in 2005 for shoving a police officer. This only complicates the case because it proves that both parties were flawed, but their pasts also should not be influences on this trial that is happening in the present.

The public might not ever truly learn what happened on the night of February 12, 2012, but it is important to remember that the media can paint Zimmerman and Martin to look like anything it chooses based on what evidence is given. Objectivity is the best asset to have when observing this trial, and it also gives you an advantage that the media does not. Don't believe everything that the news and radio tells you, because it is often the view they want people to have, and not one that takes into account all of the evidence. Murder or self-defense? that question remains a mystery for the time being. The most important thing is that the truth is discovered and that justice is served one way or another.

Summertime provides opportunities to be green

Summertime has arrived. It is a time for hours by the pool, barbecues and multiple showers a day, if you're still here in Statesboro. It can also be a time to live more sustainably and have fun doing it. You can easily make your summer into a green summer with a couple of these tweaks and tips.

First is food-related. Shopping at a farmer's market is one of the easiest and best things you can do for the environment, the local economy and your health. The Statesboro farmer's market will be in season all summer and happens downtown every Saturday morning. We have an incredible and extensive farmer's market, with fresh food for reasonable prices, arts and crafts and food samples. Try some really fresh produce once, and you'll be hooked.

THE GREEN VIEW

Second, you can green up your cookouts. Use washable plates and cups if at all possible or buy recyclable ones. Styrofoam may keep your drink cold, but it never really degrades and cannot be recycled. If you are a Georgia Southern University student, there's a 99 percent chance your cookout will include alcoholic beverages. Rather than letting beer cans pile up in your trash, just set aside a separate trashcan or bag for all that recyclable aluminum.

Third, try to go easy on the A/C. Statesboro summers can be very hot and humid, but cranking up the A/C is a strain on energy use and your electric bill. There are other options for cooling your home or apartment. One is the obvious: turn all the ceiling fans onto their highest setting. Another is to use curtains, since they block out some of the heat from sunlight coming through windows. The last and most interesting option is put a bowl of ice at the base of a desk fan. The fan circulates the cold air coming off the ice and cools the room.

Being sustainable doesn't have to be difficult. Ideas like these make living sustainably easy and doable. So let's all have a great and green summer!

Obama Administration should change priorities

Americans used to know the difference between right and wrong. Some of us still may, but for the most part this administration will twist policy to make some instances sound like the right thing when they should be condemned in the first place. Barack Obama has led our country in deceit and dishonesty from day one. What's so disturbing about it is how much he preached that he would be the most transparent and open president that this nation has been lead by.

The IRS, for example, has acted unethically, and even criminally, for targeting conservative groups such as pro-life, or tea party organizations and scrutinizing their efforts. Yet the woman who was in charge of overseeing this take place was promoted to oversee Obamacare. Barack Obama wouldn't so much as answer the phone to try to aid the American citizens who were being killed by Muslim terrorists in Benghazi. He then tries to essentially blame us for the attack by saying it was caused by an Internet anti-Muslim video. I don't think we have ever had a president who has blamed a U.S. citizen for a terrorist attack.

Earlier this year, the president along with other senators were trying to encroach on our second amendment rights by banning guns that he thought weren't fit for the average citizen's hands. Yet he along with his Attorney General

IN MY HUMBLE OPINION

BLAIR MUTIMER

Eric Holder sold high-power, military-grade weapons to Mexican drug dealers who in turn killed hundreds of innocent Mexicans along with an American border agent.

The Romeike family fled to America for the sole purpose of homeschooling their children in a Christian setting that is illegal in their native country. They were granted asylum here until Eric Holder found out and appealed the notion with intent of having them deported. He doesn't think there is enough room in this nation for a German couple that just wants to raise their kids how they see fit without being persecuted for it.

How much more will it take for people to say, "I've had enough"? As of right now we are a very backwards nation that needs to focus on getting our heads on straight before it's too late.

Mutimer is a senior construction management major from Augusta. He is involved in the College Republicans and has worked on political campaigns in Augusta.

The 'Boro needs to catch up

In the last several years, Georgia Southern University has grown, both in enrollment and infrastructure. Enrollment has increased from 16,000 in 2005 to over 20,000 last fall. Southern has continually met the needs of a growing student population by expanding in many different aspects, such as increasing the size of Henderson, to installing campus bus transportation, and now renovating the food courts Landrum and Lakeside. In the very near future, we will have a larger Paulson Stadium, a more diverse bus route system, and a modernized Health Services building. Southern has, in one way or another, successfully kept up with the rapid expansion; however, the same cannot be said for Statesboro or Bulloch County.

The two biggest beneficiaries from the growth of Georgia Southern are Bulloch County and Statesboro. But unlike Georgia Southern, the two have struggled to keep up with the student population boom. Some might say the economy could be to blame, but there are plenty of changes that the local government officials could do that will make a big difference to the tax base generated by the student population living in Statesboro.

One of the easiest solutions for bringing more revenue and interest to Statesboro would be allowing traditional bars in the 'Boro. As of right now, all "bars" have to serve some kind of food. It is my belief that if we made a law allowing for more traditional bars in the 'Boro, the nightlife would be forever changed, bringing in a more diverse scene for all students. We could also allow liquor sales in Bulloch County. I have never understood the reasoning for allowing business to go to neighboring counties, its revenue and any revenue is a good beneficiary.

MY SOUTHERN VOICE

As the student population has grown, so has the number of apartment complexes located off campus. One of the biggest negative side effects of this is the population of students without transportation. If Statesboro would enter into partnership with Georgia Southern to bring public transportation to places like the mall, Wal-Mart and downtown, I think local businesses would see an increase in sales.

Over the years GSU has continually improved its physical appearance. But as you drive around the campus you can't help but notice apartments and local shopping malls that look unkempt or in disrepair. Statesboro and Bulloch County should implement ordinances requiring better cleaning policies, maintenance practices and fencing.

All of these things will better the life of all Statesboro residents. Looks do matter, infrastructure for population conveniences matter and quality of life certainly matters. Georgia Southern has done so much for the surrounding area, its time for them to step up to the plate and make some changes. In the short and long run, these improvements will generate more money being spent locally, which is good for everyone.

Gay is a junior geography major from Leesburg. He is the president of Young Democrats of Georgia Southern University.

experience for more customers.

"Some people may think that it will change the 'local' feel of the Clubhouse, but I think it will be more of the Statesboro community coming together," Colleen Tereniak, junior early childhood education major and Clubhouse guest, said.

"Even Chuck E. Cheeses sell beer and wine," Tonia Fadden, food and beverage manager at The Clubhouse said. "This will be a better way of socializing in Statesboro without being at a bar."

The Clubhouse's guests have expressed concerns about alcohol around children. There has been no word on if there will be alcohol free spaces at The Clubhouse.

Families can easily dine at Spikes Sports Grill with or without the presence of alcohol.

"For those who don't want alcohol to be part of their experience, I don't think it will even be noticeable," Van Tassell said.

"My only concern may be that the distance from campus will increase the number of students driving after drinking," Clubhouse guest Jeffrey Thorpe said.

Construction to expand the new bar area will begin this summer.

No exact decision on a date has been made as to when the alcohol sales will begin, but Van Tassell is hopeful that the bar and grill will be ready before the fall semester. There will be a grand re-opening for Spikes Sports Grill when the bar is complete.

After the addition to the food and drink aspect, Van Tassell sees go-carts as the next phase for The Clubhouse in the next year.

"It is about experience not excess," Van Tassell said. "I hope that our guests will continue to see The Clubhouse as a high-end experience."

Tannis Kufner/The George-Anne

The Clubhouse will add beer and wine to its drink menu starting in the fall. Guests will be able to bowl, golf or play laser tag while enjoying an alcoholic beverage.

More indoor lanes were necessary for the facility to be used for Olympic events, changing the plans to include 32 indoor lanes, with each sport receiving 16 lanes, which also caused the original price to rise, Thompson said.

The main goal of the center is to allow students opportunities in competitive archery and shooting while also attracting tournaments that would benefit Statesboro's economy, Thompson said.

Although Statesboro police and local citizens will have access, those factors alone would not have been enough to gain the support of City Councilman John Riggs.

"Of course I never would have voted for it if I couldn't use it myself, but the main reason is that tournaments [can come to Statesboro]," Riggs said.

Riggs was one of three "yes" votes in a 3-0 vote on April 24 from Statesboro City Council to approve a $500,000 contribution.

"When you have a really nice center like we're about to have, people will drive and find a way to get there," Thompson said. "I think it can be an economic boost for the whole entire process while our students are getting this unique opportunity."

Thompson credits "The Hunger Games," "Brave" and country singer Miranda Lambert with getting students interested in archery.

Lambert, a spokesperson for the Archery Trade Association, has reached out to GSU to begin talks about a future benefit concert, Thompson said.

"[Miranda Lambert is] real big into archery, and one of the things we hope to do is a benefit concert to promote the shooting sports out there," Thompson said. She hopes that Lambert can rock the stage in Statesboro as soon as spring 2014.

After receiving approval to begin building from the Board of Regents, the next step is building the Shooting Sports Center, hiring a director for the center and hiring students to teach archery classes.

Chorale impresses at international competition

Shannon Jeffreys, director of choral activities at GSU, leads Georgia Southern Chorale in a performance in Linz, Austria as a part of the International Anton Bruckner Choir Competition.

Culture

BY WILLIAM PRICE

The George-Anne staff

Last night, Georgia Southern University students returned to Statesboro with silverware after a successful run in an international choral competition in Linz, Austria.

The student group, Southern Chorale, competed from May 29 to June 2 in the International Anton Bruckner Choir Competition against amateur and semi-professional choirs from Europe and Asia.

Southern Chorale achieved gold level performance in every category they competed in, taking second place in the Compulsory category, notorious for being the most demanding category. They were also recognized as one of the top six choirs at the competition, qualifying them for the final prize of the competition, which is handed to the best overall choir.

"We competed against singers much more experienced, refined and practiced than us, and we managed to up nearly all of them.

For that I am immensely proud of these students. They blew my mind," Shannon Jeffreys, Director of choral activities at GSU, said.

The group travelled internationally for the first time as a choir together to compete as the sole American group at the competition.

"Any time you do something for the first time you don't really know what to expect. I didn't know how the students were going to respond to an environment like this with so much pressure. They ended up impressing me more than ever," Jeffreys said.

Along with its second place finish in the compulsory category, Southern Chorale placed fourth in the Sacred category.

The group also went on a short tour of Italy following the competition, where they had the opportunity to visit Florence, Pisa, Rome and more. During its stay in Rome the choir had the opportunity to lead Saturday Mass at St. Peter's Basilica in Vatican City.

"Performing in the Vatican, for me, was the ultimate highlight of the trip. Being able to have the students perform there was incredible," Carolyn Bryan, tour manager for Southern Chorale and music professor at GSU, said.

Southern Chorale also sang an impromptu performance after a tour at St. Francis cathedral in Italy.

"We had fun and learned a lot everywhere we went, but being able to show off the group's ability at St. Peter's was awesome," Bryan said.

Jeffreys said, "Stuff like this not only is a great experience for all involved, it also brings a lot of recognition to our choral group and university. Every one of them sang their hearts out and I could not possibly be more proud."

Student to dress Savannah in Mardi Gras colors

Fashion

BY LINDSEY MCCORMICK

The George-Anne staff

Georgia Southern University adds a success story to its collection as a fashion-merchandising student breaks through the industry's tough barriers and debuts her clothing line for the first time.

Key'yanna Jones, a junior fashion merchandising major, plans to dress up the Hyatt Regency Hotel of Savannah this Saturday. The fashion show starts at 6:30 p.m., and admission is $5.

With a Mardi Gras theme, the authentic French and Southern feel of New Orleans can be envisioned through Jones' clothing line. Ya'niue Clothing, the debuted line, features a series of evening wear including short and long dresses that follow the classic gold, violet and emerald color scheme.

"I really became involved in fashion when growing up. My family could not afford new clothing for quite some time. I had to create my own styling and do as much as I possibly could to stay in with the trends," Jones said.

"Last May, I participated in Atlanta's Sunburst Beauty Pageant, where I designed and assembled my own dress. I won Miss Georgia Sunburst for my division, and I also took home a Best Attire award," Jones said.

Before discovering her niche at GSU, Jones attended Savannah Technical College. While there she found that with designing clothing lines at a non-fashion oriented school comes struggles.

"My professors at my previous school would shy away from the pieces that I would try to create. Since I have come to Georgia Southern, my world has opened up with new experiences and techniques. Professor Hope Wallace has been nothing but a blessing to me. She always encourages everything I try to put together," Jones said.

"This is my first year having Key'yanna as a student, and from what I have seen, she is very sweet and ambitious. The dress from the pageant that she created looked really good. This is a very big step for her, and I am curious to see her collection," fashion professor Hope Wallace said.

This has been a year full of fashion forward achievements for GSU. Wallace won the People's Choice Award at Charleston Fashion Week, GSU was named as a top fashion school in the nation and students, like Key'yanna Jones, continue to move forward in their fashion endeavors.

Black Sabbath makes strong return

Music review ★★★★★

BY ALEX LASALLE

The George-Anne staff

There is a new Black Sabbath album out. Surprise! Also, it's actually pretty good.

There's no use in comparing "13" – the band's 19th album – to earlier classics like "Paranoid," but it still holds to the dark, heavy sludge of a sound that made them so influential in the first place.

In spite of the seemingly endless lineup changes, the best work Sabbath produced was from the original lineup of Ozzy, guitarist Tony Iommi, bassist Geezer Butler and drummer Bill Ward. Ward is the only one to forego this reunion, and has been replaced by Rage Against the Machine and Audioslave drummer Brad Wilk. Even though he may have the same initials, his style is the one glaring weakness in "13."

Ozzy is in solid form here. No, it's not his best, but he still has way more power and range than most singers that have reached his age, or his level of drug and alcohol consumption. Iommi's guitar work is loud and heavy and pretty much everything that could be asked of him. The same for Butler's bass.

The odd man out through most of the album is Brad Wilk. His work with RATM and Audioslave is mostly a precise, funk-filled style. That same precision takes some of the bite out of Sabbath's sound, and while it doesn't get in the way of anything, it doesn't have the same impact as Bill Ward's heavy-handed looseness. The drum intro to "Age of Reason" makes that all the more obvious. Luckily an excellent guitar riff comes in after a few seconds.

And what about the songs? Well, they're good. Nothing on "13" is going to outweigh "Iron Man." Not even close. But "God is Dead?" and opening track "End of the Beginning" are not only tolerable, but genuinely good.

"God is Dead?" trudges along for a good 6 minutes before an adrenaline-filled turn-it-up guitar riff explodes in. "Zeitgeist" is the requisite hypnotic ballad, made worth it by a jazzy guitar solo to close it.

It's not close to best work from Black Sabbath, but for a band almost as old as your parents, it's pretty good. It also proves that metal doesn't need rapid-fire double kick drums and cartoonishly fast guitar solos to be, well, metal.

Dunleavy gets the keys to championship team

Women's soccer

BY RANDALL HAMPTON

The George-Anne staff

The women's soccer team at Georgia Southern University is under new management, and new head coach Brian Dunleavy is a familiar voice on the sideline.

Dunleavy was a key contributor to the staff that led GSU to its first Southern Conference championship in women's soccer last season. Dunleavy replaces Lindsey Vanderspiegel after serving as her assistant for the last two seasons.

"Anytime our coaches compete at the high level they compete at, and they win championships – that success is just like any other business. When you are successful at a certain level it breeds interest from the next level," Athletic Director Tom Kleinlein said.

Dunleavy now has the task of maintaining the standard set by his predecessor, but Kleinlein has faith that Dunleavy will do just that.

Brian Dunleavy

"As we looked at the candidates who were applying for the job, and we looked at the profile of the candidates, we received a number of candidates who were very similar to Coach Dunleavy," Kleinlein said.

Dunleavy had a leg up on other candidates for the job because he understands the strengths and weaknesses of the team, but that was not the deciding factor in him getting a shot.

"What really got me to that decision was the fact that he did interview. We interviewed a couple of other candidates, and he actually won the job," Kleinlein said.

Dunleavy worked hard and stayed patient and now his time to shine and show what he is capable of at the helm is here.

"I'd like to thank Tom Kleinlein and the University for trusting me to lead the women's soccer program. I also want to thank Coach Vanderspiegel for her guidance over the past two years," Dunleavy said in a news release.

If Dunleavy raises the bar and the women's soccer team continues to be successful, the next level could come knocking on his door as well, but Kleinlein wants to keep his talent in house.

Kleinlein said, "Hopefully with our move up to the Sun Belt and some of the things we'll be able to do with salaries, we are now at that level where less and less of that will happen."

The Georgia Southern University women's soccer team goes for the steal as Western Carolina University makes the kick. The women's soccer team won its first Southern Conference title after defeating Furman University 1-0 in November. The conference title gained GSU the chance to play in the NCAA tournament, marking their first ever appearance.

Kleinlein remains thorough in coaching search

BY RANDALL HAMPTON

The George-Anne staff

Georgia Southern University has seen some of its high caliber coaches accept positions elsewhere, but Athletic Director Tom Kleinlein has kept the ship steady and found replacements.

Replacing Southern-Conference-title-winning coaches like former head women's soccer coach Lindsey Vanderspiegel and head volleyball coach Chad Callihan is an arduous task. However, after every resignation is official, Kleinlein begins a searching process on a national level.

"Because we are such a premier institution in the state of Georgia, we have a lot to offer to a lot of candidates. What I do is I open up our search on a national level," Kleinlein said. "I post our job postings on national websites and I call ADs across the country and ask them if they have anybody that may be interested or if they have seen somebody that may be a good fit."

Kleinlein is at the forefront of some of the toughest decisions concerning GSU athletics, but one man cannot make such crucial decisions by himself. Kleinlein has a well-rounded team assisting him.

"We have a search committee that usually consists of myself, a representative from the president's council and then a faculty member who will sit at that table and hear the candidates as we interview them," Kleinlein said.

Kleinlein stressed the importance of that search committee and what having them in the room does for him as far as making the final decision in the hiring process.

"It's kind of a sounding board for me to bounce ideas off of and let me tell them what I'm thinking from an athletic side. They give me some advice and some guidance in terms of the university side and faculty side, so we can ensure that we've got the best fit," Kleinlein said.

Getting the best fit at head coach can lead a program to new heights, and recent hires like head basketball coach Mark Byington and women's soccer coach Brian Dunleavy both have Kleinlein's stamp of approval.

Back in April, Byington came over from Virginia Tech after spending nine seasons with the College of Charleston. Dunleavy, promoted to head coach Tuesday, is home grown having spent the last two years as an assistant under Vanderspiegel. Kleinlein took into account the circumstances surrounding both programs when making his decision.

"As I sat here and I evaluated the external interest, compared to what I already had on my campus, I don't know that there was that much difference," Kleinlein said. "When I can get somebody that was a part of building the program, it was an easy decision for me to sit down and promote coach Dunleavy to the head coach position."

As far as hiring Byington goes, Kleinlein had a clear goal in mind.

Kleinlein said, "When you make a coaching change you look not only at wins and losses, you look at different things that you are trying to change. When I looked at the culture of our basketball program, there were a lot of good things and there were some things that needed to change."

Georgia Southern University Athletic Director Tom Kleinlein addresses students, fans and the media at a press conference. Kleinlein has hired a new basketball coach and a new women's soccer coach since his arrival at GSU.
