FOREIGN TERRORS AFFECTING TRANSFER STUDENTS

Study abroad programs offer college students a chance to travel throughout foreign countries while simultaneously working toward the completion of their degrees. Participation in these opportunities (particularly in the European region) amongst American students has become increasingly popular, with enrollment rates nearly tripling over the past 20 years.

Although these enlightening experiences certainly benefit students, there are inherent risks to be considered when traveling abroad, many of which can be attributed to the difficulty of cultural assimilation or simple cases of first time travelers being taken advantage of, but also because of an influx of terrorism, rape and other violent crime plaguing European societies.

Consider the following instances:

- Paris, France is an extremely popular study abroad destination, but the capital city recently suffered from an organized terrorist attack that left 130 dead and 368 wounded, making it the most deadly attack in French history.

- During a series of New Year's Eve celebrations, a group of 1000 men in Cologne, Germany terrorized approximately 90 women as they carried out threats, assaults, robberies and in some instances rapes.

- In the past 10 years alone, Sweden has seen its sexual crime rates nearly double, which is statistically significant when considering the fact that rape cases in the country have increased 1472% in the past 40 years, giving it the second highest rate of rape per capita in the entire world.

Stay tuned to next week's paper for a deeper look at the violent crime epidemic found in formerly tourism-friendly regions of Europe and how it will affect the lives of European natives and travelers alike moving forward.

Faith, Humility & Optimism

"May your eyes look forward and your gaze be straight before you. May the path of your feet be balanced and all your ways be sure." - Proverbs 4:25-26

Life is a never ending journey and you never know what lies ahead. There will be trials and tribulations, joys and triumphs, pain and sorrow, the unexpected, the hope and prayed for and the undeniable and unworthy favor of God. The key in all things is to look forward.

The increase in off-campus crime incidents over the recent months in the areas surrounding Campus Crossings, Stadium Walk, and Cambridge has resulted in students feeling unsafe at times.

"I do sometimes feel unsafe living where I stay because of the recent crimes that have occurred," Ashanti Hardy, junior justice studies major, said. "However, I believe that the same amount of crime probably happens in other areas around Statesboro that we are just unaware of.

It seems as if a robbery or some other offense occurs almost weekly and students are receiving Eagle Alert phone calls and texts at a more frequent rate.

Although students might believe that there is an increase in crimes around the area, the Statesboro Police Department states otherwise.

"We don’t have any crime statistics that indicate an increase in crime for 2015," Justin Samples, Corporal of the Statesboro Police Department, said. "In fact, there has been a decrease in crime."

Despite this, the department has stated that multiple complexes have expressed interests in keeping their property crime-free, but this comes at a price.

"One must consider the cost and time required to handle on a day-to-day basis crime prevention isn’t always on the top of the list," Samples said. "Managers have to consider quality versus quantity when it comes to residents recognizing someone that does not live in their complex have a lot to handle on a day-to-day basis Crime prevention isn’t always on the top of the list," Samples said.

"Managers have to consider quality versus quantity when it comes to residents recognizing someone that does not live in their complex," Samples said.

"I actually have seen an extra amount of cops show up to my apartment complex," Dickerson said.

Even though Dickerson has seen an increase in cop patrols, he believes that the complex should look into their own small security patrol team and more safeguards for the residents.

"I think there aren’t many in my complexes, but I do think there will be more [in] the future when it comes to off-campus crime. In spite of this, there are still measures that an individual can do to prevent the increase of crime."

"The number one thing you can do is to lock your vehicle doors and apartment doors and always report suspicious activity to police," Samples said. "This goes back to the ‘if you see something, say something’ philosophy. The citizens are our eyes and ears in the community.

House Bill 152, which consists of a series of alcohol distribution regulations (most notably of which prevents persons under the age of 21 from entering any bar in the state) was signed by Governor Nathan Deal on May 5, 2015, and will be instituted statewide on July 1, 2016.

Most commonly known as Michael's Law, in reference to Georgia Southern freshman Michael Gatto, who passed away following a violent altercation at Rude Rudy's on August of 2014, Bill 152 includes a lot of requirements that could affect business and students throughout Georgia.

Shortly after his death, Michael's parents, Katherine and Michael Sr. learned that Rude Rudy's did not hold liquor liability insurance, which meant that the bar was not legally obligated to pay any of the costs associated with Michael's hospitalization or funeral expenses.

They later vowed to protect others and to hold licensed distributors accountable by way of legislative action, leading the way to the implementation of Michael's Law across the state. The first section of the bill defines a 'bar' as any premises at which a retailer licensed to sell alcoholic beverages derives 75 percent or more of their total annual revenue from the sale of alcoholic beverages consumed on the premises.

This particular specification has major implications for local businesses that are slightly above or below that mark. Bars will either have to increase or maintain food revenues, or, in order to establish or solidify their status as a restaurant that serves alcohol rather than a bar that serves food.

In addition to the age restriction placed on patrons, bouncers and bartenders employed by a bar must also now be 21 or older. However, the age restrictions on patrons can be circumvented if the licensed distributor is hosting a registered social event for which patrons have paid an admission price.

Section two outlines the process in which licensed alcohol distributors are responsible for self-reporting disciplinary action taken or purchased sale of powdered alcohol by civilians and licensed alcohol distributors alike.

According to GSU's student government page, this new law has major implications for local businesses that are slightly above or below that mark. Bars will either have to increase or maintain food revenues, or, in order to establish or solidify their status as a restaurant that serves alcohol rather than a bar.

Georgia Southern's Shuttle Gus program has received approvals for the university's activity budget committee to purchase new vehicles. Still awaiting state approval, adding new cars would allow more students to take advantage of the program.

Shuttle Gus was originally started because of the need to prevent Southern students from driving under the influence. However, Shuttle Gus is available for any students that needs transportation regardless of the situation.

"I have used Shuttle Gus in the past. My car was not working and it was very helpful for me to be able to get around without having to pay an extreme amount for a taxi," Jordan Nourse, junior exercise science major, said.

Safety of students is one of the main concerns for the Student Government Association (SGA). As a result, the ability to provide a free and safe transportation service for the students has made Shuttle Gus a success.

"I think Shuttle Gus is such a success with our students because it is free. It's a service that SGA provides students and there are no questions asked," SGA Senator KeShawn Harris, senior public relations major, said.

New solar-powered tables funded by student sustainability fees

Outside the IT Building, four SolGreen Evodia Mini SmartTables—solar-powered patio tables with built-in charging stations—were installed this past December to provide an outdoor location for students to work and socialize while recharging their devices. These SmartTables are equipped with four power outlets and four USB outlets, shut down automatically during rainstorms, can last five to seven days on stored power during overcast weather and contain LED lights for nighttime use. Robert Lake, associate professor of Curriculum, Foundation and Reading, proposed the project and received a sustainability grant to fund the tables. The project’s $40,950 grant was funded by Student Sustainability Fees, which fund several sustainability projects proposed by students, faculty and staff every year.

"I felt that to have these solar panels would raise awareness of the possibilities of alternative sources of energy in a time where we need to start diversifying energy resources," Lake said. "We have a chance to make a difference."

One of the four tables is specifically designed to be wheelchair accessible, and the remaining three will generally accommodate wheelchairs as well, according to Lake.

Located in a high-traffic area and popular lunch spot, the SmartTables have already garnered attention from some students.

"I think it's a really good idea. I like that they added the coverage over them, too, to make that space more accessible and more usable," Jesus Headrick, senior writing and linguistics major, said.

Leege feels that it's important for people to propose projects like the SmartTables, so the students fees can be used to assist student lives and be sustainable at the same time.

"I think having the student fee in place has really opened the door for our campus to improve in sustainability by leaps and bounds. Because anybody with a good idea can apply to get those funds," Leege said. "Now, you can sit and work at that table, plug in that laptop, plug in that iPhone or whatever it is you need to recharge, and you can enjoy being outdoors and charging that device at the same time."

While the tables benefit students and faculty, some difficulties were encountered during the installation of the tables.

"The tables and canopies did come in some very large wood crates that were a little challenging to move them (sic) from the warehouse to the CET Building patio," James Grigg, director of Facilities Operation, said.

Leege feels that it's important for people to propose projects like the SmartTables, so the students fees can be used to assist student lives and be sustainable at the same time.

"I think having the student fee in place has really opened the door for our campus to improve in sustainability by leaps and bounds. Because anybody with a good idea can apply to get those funds," Leege said. "Now, there's this great mechanism by which we can actually allocate funds to reduce our ecological footprint and become a greener campus."

EAGLES TRAVEL TO DUKE

BY HAYDEN BOUDEAUX & MARQUIS WILLIAMS

The Eagles traveled to Durham to take on the Duke Blue Devils. The Eagles opened the game with a quick offensive rebound, a steal, and a layup to grab the first points of the game. Despite the Eagles scoring 29 points, four assists, and four steals, the Eagles ultimately fell to Duke, 65-99.

Duke was too much for the Eagles to overcome. The game was a great learning experience for Georgia Southern, as Duke is likely the best team they will face all season. "I wanted our guys to see what their culture was like and how hard it is to hang around at the beginning," Brown said about playing in Cameron Indoor. "We started getting up on balls towards the end of the game though, it's a learning experience."

FIRST SUN BELT WIN

The Eagles hung on in overtime to get their first Sun Belt Conference win against the Troy Trojans 93-88. The Eagles offense had one of its best performances all season as they shot 53 percent from the floor and 32 percent from long range.

Sophomore Jake Allsmiller sparked the Eagles by hitting three 3 pointers in the first four minutes of the game giving the Eagles more confidence in their offense for the game.

The team combined for 44 points in the paint as multiple players contributed to the effort as they keyed in on passing the ball around to create open shots with sophomores. Mike Hughes led the way with 22 points.

“We just knew we had to go out there and do whatever we needed to do to win,” Hughes said.

Tookie Brown made some big plays and Ike Smith, Jake, and Mike without Montae Glenn, a lot of guys came in mixing and matching the lineup and we’re glad the result came out for our guys,” Byington said. The win moved the Eagles to a 17-4 home record in their last 21 contests. They’ll prepare for a two game home stand starting Thursday against Louisiana-Lafayette at 7:30 p.m.

Microtransactions: a simple solution being handed ranch instead of the desired salad dressing you wanted, an off handed compliment that may be too specific, or just a random comment that makes you feel a certain type of way. Now these injustices must be stopped, and the only logical solution is to implement a payment mechanism for the people having the comments made toward them.

There should be a small fee transferred between the two parties in order to show that the person has been affected, and the only exception would be the one “offended” should be the one paying. The aggressor is the true victim when they are called out for these “microattacks.” This is not fair for one person to attack another human being for making a comment not totally thought out. So there needs to be money exchanged between the two individuals in order for the aggressor to be compensated for the social stigmas that are now inflicted on their lives. If it is a one time thing, it is simply a $0.99 exchange through various apps like VenMo, SnapChat, and Facebook Messenger. However, if the commentator continues to berate anyone that dares come at them with a statement that could be perceived in any way racist, sexist, classist, and/ or ableist (all of which are very serious issues) they will be required to start a monthly fee of $8.99 in order to save their bank account the trouble of being targeted.

An alternate solution to this payment is not to be offended by every little comment toward one’s ethnicity on a day to day basis. Micro-aggression focuses on the tiny bitter comments towards a person or their children. There are many cases of very serious instances of micro-aggressions, except that is not micro-aggression. That is called racism. There is nothing wrong about asking a Latina if they are legal or not, that’s just racist. However our millennial generation has decided to create a form for any type of phrase that could be pertinent offensive in any light. So now we have two options either learn to be more easy going or start paying these microtransactions in order for those victims to learn how they are affecting everyone’s lives. I will be part of this solution as well, since I’m just an Irish white kid named…well, Daryl. Daryl. It doesn’t matter because I definitely have never walked into a room and had someone tell me they were expecting a very different person.

The first week of classes is to set three or four alarms to ensure that we actually awaken before the Georgia Southern schedule is out and putting it in the front of binders, and saving our classes into our phone calendar. I suggest that we all do something different this semester. What that something might be, is entirely up to you but I believe that this year something needs to change. My personal plan is to establish a routine early on the first week of classes. That means waking up early to make breakfast, workout, study or whatever the case may be.

The major issue, I think is killing us as students coming back is not establishing long term goals at the beginning of the semester. This has a massive impact on how quickly you can get back into the swing of things on campus. By setting goals, you are affecting your lives that you are going to ensure that you have better attendance, get better grades, and make a positive impact on campus. As students, we all know the struggle of leaving the comfort of our beds to endure the ever changing weather that plagues Statesboro. With the weather dropping to near freezing temperatures, it is hard to find any drive to get back on track with classes. But what we should always remember when we look at ourselves in the mirror in the morning is #newyearnewme.

Bundle up Eagles, it’s gonna be a long one.

YES, THAT IS YOUR ALARM.

It’s a great Monday morning at your home while you sip coffee and slowly eat your breakfast. Your parents are off at work and you are watching whatever garbage television is on this early in the morning but there is something not quite right. What is that? Sound? Loud, repeated buzzing that is bouncing around your room. Yeah, that’s your alarm. It’s the first day back to school and the only logical solution is to implement a payment system for making a comment not true.

“Telling stories and spreading love and knowledge is my ultimate calling to this planet and it’s people. Through forms of media like radio, photography and filmmaking, I have seen the intimacy between media and society. Composing thoroughly designed communication platforms, in representation of my family, friends and dedication to study is very important to me.”

Health Services is now located on 984 Plant Driv, directly across from the Performing Arts Center. Students can begin going to Health Services building on Monday, Jan. 11.

The new Health Services building, 39,000 square feet, took almost a year to build and cost 8.9 million dollars. It was built by Collins Cooper Carusi Architects and Jaru.

The first floor houses the Pharmacy, Injection Clinic, Eagle Eye Care, General Medical Clinic and the Lab. The second floor houses Administration, Physical Therapy, Health Education and Women's Health.

The new pharmacy will have over-the-counter medicine and since it is 10 times bigger than the old pharmacy students and faculty will soon be able to get their prescription filled at the pharmacy without going to other places like CVS and Walmart.

In March, students will be able to use their insurance in the pharmacy.

"My goals are to meet the needs of students, grow and broaden services," Russell Bozeman, Pharmacy Manager said.

Eagle Eye Care was previously located in Centennial Place, but many students were unaware of their location. Eagle Eye Care can fill most prescriptions for glasses and contact lenses, adjust and repair frames and conduct eye exams.

"I think the location is better for the students. We'll have a lot more traffic coming through. Right now we don't have a doctor, but we're working on that. It'll be a while before we are a full eye-care facility," Cardine Thompson, Licensed Dispensing Optician said.

General Medical clinic is where students come in for common problems like colds, high blood pressure and diabetes. "Everything is pretty much the same routine for students, but we're trying to make sure we are consistent," Stacy Lucus, Certified Medical Assistant said.

The injection clinic has two rooms where they issue injections. There is a large freezer that holds injection and immunization sera.

"We do immunization compliance, allergy shots, chickenpox and QuantiFERONs," Deltrye Jackson, Certified Medical Assistant said.

The Radiology lab has a remote controlled x-ray machine that moves to accommodate the area in which students are getting x-rayed.

"We cater to our students and take care of all their needs, that's what we're here for. We have a whole lot more services to offer now. We have physical therapy, optometry, ortho, clinical staff, X-ray labs and everything else we need for our students," Kristje Hendrix, Patient Assistant Nurse said.

The physical therapy room has two private and semi-private rooms. It has a treadmill, leg press, bike, rebounder, stepper and upper body ergometer. This equipment is used to test out the flexibility of the patients.

"Without students, there wouldn't be a Health Services on this campus," Hendrix said.
