The Regent's test: everything you need to know

By Justin Johnson
Staff Writer

The deadline to have completed the state-mandated Regent's Test is fast approaching for many GSU students, yet these students have little understanding of the test's purpose or time restraints imposed by the Board of Regents. All students under the University System of Georgia are required to take it, but what is the Regent's Test and why is it so important?

The Regents' Test is a two-part, two-hour test. It consists of a one hour reading comprehension section and a one hour essay section, and it is offered to GSU students during one week of every semester. In 1972, the Board of Regents of the University System of Georgia instituted the Regents' Testing Program as a way to make sure that all students receiving degrees from Georgia institutions possessed certain minimum skills of reading and writing.

"The Regents' Test came about in the early 1970s because Georgia college and universities were issuing diplomas to people that could not read or write," George Lynch, assistant dean and director of testing, said. "By mandating the Regents' Test, we can say that at least one time in a student's career, they had mastered those skills."

Every student at GSU must take the Regent's Test by the semester after completing 30 semester hours.

Students who have earned 45 semester credit hours and have not passed BOTH parts of the test must enroll in remedial courses until they pass both parts. If a student fails to take the Regents' Test before the 45th hour, he or she will automatically be placed in review classes.

Lynch said he recommends that students take the test between zero and 45 hours.

"If a student does not take the test by their 45th hour, they will be placed into review classes," Lynch said. "We also recommend that students complete both English 1101 whose papers are graded.

Each essay is graded three times by three different raters. Raters use a four-point scale to grade the essays. A score of "4" indicates superior performance, a "3" shows a clearly passing performance, a "2" is the minimal passing performance, and a "1" is a substandard or failing performance.

"We adhere to the policies issued to us by the the Board of Regents, and do what is mandated while administering the exam," Lynch said.

Any student wanting to practice for the Regents' Test can do so at the GSU web site. (<http://www.gasou.edu>) Students wanting to practice specifically for the reading portion of the test may take the online practice

"IF A STUDENT DOES NOT TAKE THE TEST BY THEIR 45TH HOUR, THEY WILL BE PLACED INTO REVIEW CLASSES," and English 1102 before taking the Regents' Test."

The essay portions of the Regents' Test are distributed by the Regent's Testing Office to regional testing centers around the state and scored by representatives from each institution in the University System of Georgia. The reading portion of the Regents' Test is graded on machine-readable answer sheets and scored by computer. Each student's test is identified only by the student's social security number, so the graders do not know the identity or the institution of the students test with an instructional evaluation at http://www.gasou.edu/wwwrtp/f23fra_1.htm, and those students interested in practicing for the essay portion of the test may do so at <http://www.gasou.edu/wwwrtp/essamp.htm>.

If you did not sign up for the Regents' Test and you know that you are getting close to your 45th hour, contact the Testing Office at (912) 681-5415 to inquire about future test dates.

The Regents' Test started this semester on October 30 and will finish on November 2.

CANDY, CANDY, CANDY: Halloween came a little earlier for some Statesboro children last Wednesday as Greek Row held its annual 'Greek Street Trick-or-Treat.'

'Greek Street Trick-or-Treat' gives back to the community

By Ellen Rogers
Staff Writer

The second Annual "Greek Street Trick-or-Treat" brought out everything from big, scary monsters to sweet little cowboys, all on a great mission for one thing: candy!

GSU sororities and fraternities paired up on Greek Row last Wednesday, dressed up in the spirit of Halloween and provided treats for all of their visitors. Invitations were extended to all elementary school and younger children in the Statesboro area, including those of GSU faculty and staff.

"This was our way of giving back to the community and just saying 'thanks'," Jane Campaigne, GSU Greek advisor, said.

At each Greek house, there were plenty of "tricks" for the kids to participate in, as well as treats. Musical chairs, a cake walk, "go fish," bobbing for apples and a bean bag toss were all part of the fun.

The event, which was from 6-8 p.m., proved to be a great success.

"It was a really good turn-out," Sarah Redding, a member of Alpha Delta Pi, said. "There was a lot more participation this year than last year."

Greek members also seemed to have just as much fun as the younger crowd.

"It was a crazy, fun time," Christopher Wright, a Sigma Chi pledge, said. "One guy scared some little kids—he didn't mean to, though. We even got to be on TV!"

Harvard officials say online notes could lead to trouble for students

U-WIRE

CAMBRIDGE, Mass.—Psychology Professor Richard J. McNally was surprised to learn that the lectures for his introductory psychology course share a Web site with an advertisement for the Discover card.

Someone, apparently one of his students, had paraphrased McNally's lectures and sold them to Versity.com, an online "knowledge center" that collects lecture notes from colleges across the country, then publishes them on the World Wide Web.

"It's news to me," McNally says. McNally says he had heard of services like Versity, but didn't know his own course, Psychology 1, "Introduction to Psychology," was online. "I'm not pleased."

Versity pays students for their notes on 24 Harvard classes, in spite of a long-standing Harvard ban on the sale of lecture notes. For their risk, the note-takers receive about $8 per lecture.

According to Freshman Dean Elizabeth Studley Nathans, selling notes is a serious offense and could mean disciplinary action and a meeting with the Administrative Board.

"Any Harvard student who is employed by or who uses the services of Versity.com or any similar organization, is in violation of college rules regarding the integrity of academic work," Nathans says.

Charles Berman, chief executive officer of Versity, says college administrators have misconstrued the company's mission.

"I think that Versity is dramatically misunderstood. We are focused on being a learning center," not a path-of-least-resistance for students too lazy to wake up for lectures, Berman says. "But if it's used properly, we can create a great product. And that's clearly what we're trying to do."

As of Wednesday, Versity had set up Web sites for two dozen Harvard classes — mostly Core classes and popular large lectures—but only 14 of the sites include synopses of lectures. Versity is recruiting note-takers for another 70 or so more.

According to their Website, Versity covers 3,500 classes on 88 campuses. They do not charge money to view the notes, but they do require that users register for a username and password.

The sites boast vibrant colors and flashy layout, plus a synopsis of 500 words or so for each lecture. The Web site does carry advertisements for credit cards, Internet companies and other businesses that target college students.

Versity was established in 1998 by Jeff Lawson and three other enterprising undergraduates at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor. Last year the founders dropped out of the university and moved to Menlo Park, Calif., to work full-time on their business.

TAKE NOTES AT YOUR OWN RISK

Charles Berman says the company warns all its note-takers that their colleges' administrations may not agree with all of Versity's activities, and that they may suffer penalties or discipline.

"Specifically, we absolutely tell people that some campuses find this controversial. We do not happen to agree with agree the policy" of the deans at Harvard, he says.

The penalties note-takers face may be grave indeed.

Harvard administrators point to page 302 of the Handbook for Students: "Students who sell lecture or reading notes, papers, or translations or who are employed by a tutoring school or term paper company [...] may be required to withdraw."

Dean of Harvard College Harry R. Lewis '68 says Harvard's rules have been on the books for decades, possibly since the 1930s.

"Selling lecture notes actually is not a new concept," Lewis says. "As is often the case, the World Wide Web is just an enabling technology for an old practice."

At the beginning of the year, when Versity was recruiting students to take notes for its pages, the Freshman Dean's Office issued a memo warning first-years about companies selling notes, says Nathans.

"The reasons behind [the rule], I suspect, have to do with wanting students to take full responsibility for their own work, and to become engaged as fully in each course as possible," says Senior Associate Registrar Thurston Smith. "It is not difficult for me to imagine that students who go to every class and take their own notes will be more involved in the courses they take."

Students help raise $700 for homeless

By Sarah Brickhouse
Staff Writer

Despite many events held last week, more needs to be done to help the homeless, Victoria Futch, director of volunteer services, said.

In order to commemorate Homelessness and Hunger Week, Volunteer Services held events across campus to raise money and consciousness for those in need.

One such fund raiser, "The Tent Event," was held on Landrum lawn last Wednesday night and was a "very big success," Victoria Futch, director of Volunteer Services, said.

Approximately 60 people, mainly faculty and students, were seen scattered across the Landrum lawn with their tents, spending a night outdoors to raise money for the cause.

"We're not pretending that spending one night outdoors in any way equates to what it would be like to be homeless," Futch said. "It is simply a symbolic attempt to draw attention to those in need."

Another fund raiser, "The Hunger Banquet" was held last Thursday in the Williams Center Dining Hall.

This was a unique kind of banquet with an experiential component which enabled the guests to gain a better appreciation for the world's gross inequities, Futch said.

Faculty, students and members of the community were entertained by

A GOOD CAUSE: Students get ready for a night outdoors to help those who are less fortunate. An estimated 60 people spent the night on the lawn Wednesday. Hal Fulmer, master of ceremonies, and GSU's own "Voices of Ministry" gospel choir.

Michael Elliott, director of Union Missions in Savannah, was the guest speaker for the event. He enlightened and inspired the guests with his personal experiences in the field with the homeless. He told of how he started a homeless shelter with only meager resources.

"This was a night to be remembered," one banquet guest said. Everyone in the dining hall was also given a one-of-a-kind ceramic bowl made by Jane Pleak's art students in order to commemorate the evening.

Both events combined raised nearly $700 for the Statesboro Food Bank and the GSU Habitat House.

"We are extremely pleased," Futch said, "but more needs to be done."

NATIONAL NEWS BRIEF

Buchanan says matchup doesn't offer choice

The Associated Press

BISMARCK, N.D.--Presidential candidate Pat Buchanan said Saturday he left the Republican Party because its front-runner, Texas Gov. George W. Bush, does not offer voters an alternative on trade questions, foreign policy or opposition to abortion.

Buchanan, who left the Republican Party last week to campaign for the Reform Party nomination for president, said Bush agrees too often with Democratic Vice President Al Gore on issues Republican supporters care about.

Buchanan said he switched parties so he could continue to emphasize his opposition to abortion and skepticism about U.S. trade agreements and foreign policy decisions that have sent troops where the United States has no national interest.

"That is what this is about," Buchanan told an enthusiastic crowd of more than 250 people at a North Dakota Christian Coalition meeting here. "It is about ... offering the American people a real, genuine, authentic choice of destinies for this country, and I just don't think we're getting that."

He said he is optimistic about getting the Reform Party nomination, "despite what the big fella in Minnesota thinks," a reference to Minnesota Gov. Jesse Ventura, a former professional wrestler who is the nation's only Reform Party governor. Ventura has said he prefers someone else as the party's presidential candidate.

"We're going to win that. We may have to b o d y - s l a m (Ventura) once or twice, but we're going to win it," Buchanan said.

Buchanan on Saturday repeated his promise to appoint U.S. Supreme Court justices who favor overturning Roe v. Wade, the high court's 1973 decision that made abortion legal nationwide. His statements on the subject drew a standing ovation from the crowd.

Gore and Bush also support the North American Free Trade Agreement, which is meant to create a free-trade area with Canada and Mexico, and the establishment of the World Trade Organization, Buchanan said. The WTO is an international body that judges trade disputes.

"IT IS ABOUT ... OFFERING THE AMERICAN PEOPLE A REAL, GENUINE, AUTHENTIC CHOICE OF DESTINIES FOR THIS COUNTRY, AND I JUST DON'T THINK WE'RE GETTING THAT."

Teacher accused of sexual assault released from jail on bond

The Associated Press

HEPHZIBAH, Ga.-- A Hephzibah High School math teacher and former boys' track coach accused of sexually assaulting a 17-year-old female student has been released from jail.

Alphonza Griffin, 35, was released from Richmond County jail Friday after a judge set his bond at $40,000 and told the teacher he was not allowed to have any contact with the alleged victim or any school-aged children.

Superior Court Judge Albert M. Pickett also told Griffin he must give up any attempts to regain his teaching and coaching job until the criminal case against him is concluded.

The 11-year veteran coach and teacher was indicted Tuesday for sexual assault on a person in school, punishable by up to three years in prison.

The charge is based on the female student's allegation that Griffin assaulted her last winter while giving her a ride home in his car, according to the indictment returned Tuesday by a Richmond County grand jury. The student graduated in June.

Griffin has been on paid leave since April 2 pending an investigation of the allegations.

An administrative hearing is set for Monday. Unless Griffin resigns before then, Superintendent Charles Larke said that he plans to request his termination.

Scholarship fund established for former GSU student

By the PRCA 3330 Public Relations Writing Class

For most of us, Homecoming 1999 has come and gone, but for friends and family of former GSU student Beth Martin, this year's homecoming will never be forgotten. During Homecoming weekend, Beth's parents were surprised to discover that the Elizabeth Leigh "Beth" Martin Memorial Scholarship she can continue to give; and she will never be forgotten.

Martin was killed October 31, 1997 when her car hydroplaned on I-16, ironically at the GSU exit. She was en route to the Georgia/Florida game.

GSU senior Collins Simpson, along with Beth's relatives and close friends, have been busy organizing fund-raising efforts since July.

"We're amazed at the number of people who have jumped into the project," Simpson said. "It has been like a snowball effect."

Simpson said that since the accident, she has spent many hours talking to the Martins trying to figure out why such a terrible thing could happen to such a good person.

"During many conversations with her mother and father, they have expressed to me their fear of people forgetting about Beth," Simpson said. "They are afraid that as we get older and move on with our lives, the memories of Beth will slowly fade. I believe that Beth would have wanted to be able to keep on giving and through the Elizabeth Leigh "Beth" Martin Memorial Scholarship she can continue to give; and she will never be forgotten."

There were a number of groups on campus and in the community that helped make the scholarship possible. Phi Mu raised a large sum of money for the scholarship as did many other fraternities and sororities. There were also a couple of business who got involved with the fundraising project including Mal-Ad Promotions and Hackers Golf Park.

"I can't thank the people here in Statesboro enough for their help," Simpson said. "Without them we could not have reached our goal of raising the money before the end of the school year when Beth would have graduated."

In order to endow a scholarship, the GSU Foundation requires a minimum of $10,000.

The Martins were extremely surprised at the breakfast held over Homecoming weekend, at which they learned about the scholarship for the first time. The Martins thanked everyone for helping raise the money for the scholarship in their daughter's name.

REMEMBERING BETH: A scholarship fund has been established in the name of Elizabeth "Beth" Martin, a former GSU student who died in a car accident just over two years ago.

"We've always worried that people would forget about our Beth," Martin said. "Now all of you have made that impossible and we are very grateful."

In addition to a few close friends and family, Bill Golden, president of the GSU Foundation and Barbara Allen, development officer for scholarships and endowments, attended the breakfast that was held at the Statesboro Inn on Main St.

The new scholarship will be awarded annually to a GSU student. The criteria for the scholarship will be decided by the Martin family, first preference will be given to a graduate of Cartersville High School.

Beth enrolled at GSU in the fall of 1996 after graduating from Cartersville High School. She was a resident of Johnson Hall and a sister in Phi Mu sorority.

International studies program flourishes at GSU

By Mary Render
Staff Writer

Imagine yourself in a place far away from home. Your eyes move with expectancy to see the world around you. You know how to speak English, but everyone you meet speaks Italian. What are you going to do? How are you going to communicate?

Well, you can go to Italy and learn their language and culture through GSU. Few students know about the center for international studies.

International studies has two degrees. The first is a bachelor of arts in international studies consisting of an interdisciplinary social science background for students interested in careers outside the U.S. or international agencies within the U.S.

The other degree is a bachelor of science of international trade needs a multi-disciplinary that requires courses in business, foreign language and international studies.

The center for international studies is not limited to international students, but is available to all students. It is an academic department that offers courses from contemporary world cultures to international public relations. Also, GSU is the only school in the University System of Georgia that offers Irish studies as a minor.

Back to Italy. The study abroad program is a program in which students take courses at GSU and go to another country for two weeks to one semester and experience that culture. Nancy Shumaker, director for international studies, said that the study abroad program gives students "a chance to see how the world sees us. You get to broaden your understanding by having an open mind about other cultures."

Students such as Ron Wright have traveled internationally learning about different cultures.

"I witnessed human origins and saw fossils," Wright said after his visit to South Africa.

So, if you have a desire to travel, communicate and learn about other cultures, make a visit to the center for international studies. It is located in room 1119 in the Forest Drive Building.

The study abroad program helps you adapt to a diversity of cultures. Reach for the opportunity of a lifetime.

The secret is now out.

Our Opinion

There have been many things said about Aaron Nicely while he has been running for city council. Some of them have been on target, and some have been a little exaggerated.

But the idea that Aaron Nicely is reminiscent of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. is ridiculous and, frankly, an insult to the memory of Dr. King.

Everyone has their own opinion of the significance of Dr. King. Some believe he was the reason that the civil rights movement was started, others simply think he was an important figure in the struggle. And still others believe he was not aggressive enough in his battles.

But almost everyone believes that King laid down his life for what he believed in. And almost everyone believes that he was fighting for the good of the nation, not just one race. The man was assassinated for helping to lead the civil rights movement. He was imprisoned for his beliefs.

Not to mention that he was a wonderful speaker and an inspirational motivator. He earned his place in history even before his assassination.

Nicely may be a nice guy. Jack Williamson is free to think whatever he wants about our SGA president. But Aaron Nicely is not risking his life to be elected to city council. He is not getting crosses burned in his yard. He is not leading a revolution. Even if Nicely was the first student to run for city council in Statesboro, he would hardly be revolutionary.

Why is his bid for the seat not a revolution? Why is he safe to run for city council? Because of the efforts of King. He paved the way for Nicely's run.

There is no comparison between Nicely and King. The only thing they have in common is they are both African-American and they are both leaders. That is the end of the comparison, although the contrast could go on for pages.

Nicely is not going to be imprisoned for trying to run for city council. He is not risking anything except for the $500 he contributed to his own campaign. And since we have yet to see any ads, posters, pins or stickers for Nicely, he probably hasn't lost anything.

To compare the two is an insult to the memory and legacy of King. Williamson should have known better.

Just when you thought it was safe to go out at night...

JUSTIN MILLER

COLUMNIST

I hate to do this, but sometimes I have to climb up on the old soap box and get preachy. It's inevitable, I suppose, as sooner or later certain things just rub me the wrong way until I'm raw.

It's sorta like that forever-scary fingernails on the chalkboard thing when your teeth grind against your inner ankle bone.

But there is something abrew on this campus that I can't overlook, and I can't keep quiet about. It is the stuff of storied nightmares. And I bet I'm not alone in my misery.

Obviously I speak of karaoke.

Like many of you I find myself looking for something to do in the evening, and homework just doesn't cut it. Karaoke offers a respite from all that is, well, sane. It is supposed to be crazy, goofy, drunk to your elbows fun. And it beats the heck out of the usual, "is she staring at me? Wait, am I staring at her? Hmm, does she like me, or does she think I'm a stalker . . . Waitress! We could use another bucket here!"

At the very least karaoke gives you something to do, a way to interact with others, and an honest reason to say, "honey, bring me another!" But we gotta start laying down some ground rules, because what passes for "karaoke" around here is way off the mark.

First of all, and I can't stress this pretend so originally!!"

Second, if you are a guy and you enlist to sing the duet, "Summer Lovin'," there can only be four reasons why: either you are (1) the karaoke DJ, and the girl who wants enough, repeat after me: "you suck, I suck, we all suck at singing." That said, singing on karaoke night is in no way supposed to resemble an audition. There is not any chance at all, none, nada, zilch, of Mr. Bigshot Record Producer hearing you sing, and muttering to himself, "Boy, have I got to put them on my label!! I don't think I've ever heard Tone Loc inter-to sing it is ready for some "lovin'" of her own, (2) you have lost a bet, (3) you are going through some sort of initiation process, or (4) you are subtly trying to come out of the closet.

Third, presentation is everything. Don't look at the screen the entire time, and be animated—over-exaggerate every movement. The point is to act like an idiot (actually, "karaoke" means "act like an idiot" in Japanese). You are not Jim Morrison, Axl Rose, or T.L.C. Resist the urge to imitate them (or anyone else for that matter) in any concert/video of their's you have previously seen.

Fourth, never, under any circumstances, mumble or skip a word. When in doubt, shout a clever word or saying, but don't giggle.

Fifth, the group thing is okay. It builds confidence, and gives you a feeling of security, but don't be the one in the group that whispers.

Next to lastly, always cheer, clap, scream, shout, whistle, and sing along, no matter what the song is, who's singing it, or how they sound. Why? Because you're next pal, and we'll return the favor.

Lastly, the coolest guy in the bar is always, I repeat, always, the guy who sings Adam Sandler's car song. Buy him a beer.

Me, I couldn't carry a tune in a bucket, but you better believe I'll be at Buffalo's on Thursday and Woodin' Nickel on Friday, screamin' my lungs out till they bleed—tell me, does it get any more fun than that?

Be happy and confident with yourself

Have you ever looked in the mirror and said "No wonder I'm not dating anyone," or have you ever thought "If only I could lose those extra 15 pounds..."?

Why do you think that people constantly want to change themselves? Who are they trying to please? Are they trying to change for themselves, or are they trying to gain the approval of someone else?

Do you ever take into consideration the number of people that want to change who they are in order to become someone else, to become anyone else?

Everyday on campus, I see so many people who constantly belittle themselves or complain about the fact that they are too fat or too thin, too tall or too short, or too good for someone or not good enough for someone else.

Why do people constantly want to change their outward appearance? Is it not possible to be completely happy with yourself by not changing or conforming to meet another's standards?

Why must people subject themselves to the pains of anorexia, bulimia, or other horrors to make someone else happy? If someone really wants to change, let it be because they want to become a more health conscious person, and not because they think they will be asked out if only they would lose the weight or gain it.

other people out there just like you. Everyone wants to be noticed, to be cared for, and to be appreciated for the person that they are.

Maybe they don't wear a sign on their

DON'T LET YOURSELF THINK THAT YOU ARE NOT GOOD ENOUGH, OR THAT YOU ARE ALONE IN THIS WORLD, BECAUSE THERE ARE SO MANY OTHER PEOPLE OUT THERE JUST LIKE YOU.

"If only I..." is a quote that people should steer away from and start sentences with quotes like "When I..." or "I can." If a person is to change, let it be for themselves, and not for any other reason.

Don't let yourself think that you are not good enough, or that you are alone in this world, because there are so many forehead expressing their feelings, but almost everyone has something that they want to change about themselves.

Be happy with who you are and have faith in who and what you are. You are a person, just like myself, just like the guy or girl sitting next to you. We all have a common goal — to find happiness. Obtain your goal by starting with you first, and realize just how great of a person you are. Perhaps you won't ever get asked out by the haute in your 11 o'clock class, and maybe you will never be on the cover of "GQ" or "Cosmopolitan," but who cares? That person doesn't realize what you really had to offer, and between you and me, they don't know what they are missing out on.

If you are afraid to ask someone out on a date or to talk to the girl or guy you've had a crush on since your first semester, don't be. What's the worst that could happen? They say no? That doesn't mean that your life as you know it is over; it only means that someone was crazy enough to pass up a good thing when they had the chance. Don't get discouraged!

Just remember, great things come to those who wait! Believe that, and don't give up. So, turn your frown upside down, and recognize yourself for all that you have to offer by simply being you.

Take some advice from William Shakespeare and live by it. "To thine own self be true." Let that become your motto.

Your Opinion

Williamson compares Nicely to Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

Students of Georgia Southern, I have read many articles questioning the integrity and motives of Aaron Nicely. Although I do not know Aaron personally, I, like many of you, have to sit back and judge him by his actions. I have seen nothing more than leadership and excellence in this young man.

He has stepped out of his comfort zone and taken ridiculous press. He has done these things because he believes in something better, not only for the students of Georgia Southern, but for the community of Statesboro as well. His initiative and perseverance brings to mind Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., who in the 1960's saw something better than what people were willing to offer. Although Dr. King never saw his dream manifested, he made a difference in the lives of many people across the nation.

Aaron Nicely's impact on Georgia Southern University and the city of Statesboro has not been fully understood as of yet. However, I support any student who has the courage to stand firm and stand up for others. It is time for a change, and I look forward to bringing about this change with Aaron Nicely.

Sincerely,
Jack Williamson

Last Week in GSU Sports

- The GSU women's soccer team tied Jacksonville State 0-0 in action that took place on last Friday.
- The GSU golf team finished fourth with a score of 593 at the Old Dominion/Seascape Collegiate Golf Tournament held on last Monday and Tuesday.
- The GSU volleyball team was defeated 3-0 by UGA last Tuesday in Athens, Ga.

GSU offense returns to normal in 55-6 blowout

By Doug Kidd
Assistant Sports Editor

JOHNSON CITY, Tenn. - For the second time in the past three weeks, GSU was held scoreless in the first quarter, but still managed to get their offense going in Saturday's 55-6 beating of East Tennessee State. The win upped GSU's record to 7-2, 6-1 in the Southern Conference.

Unlike the Appalachian State game two weeks ago, the Eagles found their offensive rhythm in the final three quarters racking up 685 yards and thirty-five second half points. GSU didn't turn the ball over during the contest and had a banner day passing. Greg Hill finished 9 of 11 passing for 172 yards and a touchdown.

Although GSU put up 55 points Saturday, they found themselves down 6-0 after the first quarter. Senior ETSU tailback Brandon Walker broke free for a 32-yard touchdown that capped a six-play drive. Walker, the Buccaneers only offensive answer of the day, outplayed Adrian Peterson in the first half, gaining 104 of his 119 total rushing yards in the game's opening half.

After a Greg Hill one-yard touchdown run on a fourth down put GSU on the board early in the second quarter, Hill found freshman Anthony Williams up the left sideline for a 66-yard score that put GSU up for good, 14-6.

It then became the Adrian Peterson show, with the sophomore fullback rushing for touchdown runs of 1, 1, 26, and 2 yards respectively. Peterson started slowly in the first quarter but finished strongly, ending the game with his ninth career 200 yard rushing contest. Carrying the ball 33 times for 216 yards, Peterson allowed GSU to control the tempo of the game and help put away ETSU for the third year in a row. With his 216-yard, four-touchdown performance, Peterson moved to within one game of the I-AA record for career 200-yard rushing games, held by New Hampshire's Jerry Azumah.

ALL SYSTEMS GO: After two weeks during which the GSU offense looked sloppy at times, the Big Blue Machine hit its stride Saturday with a 685-yard performance that saw Adrian Peterson and Greg Hill move up several of the school's all-time lists.

Peterson also moved his way up the GSU record book, surpassing former quarterback Tracy Ham and fullback Roderick Russell for second on the all-time rushing list. He also moved ahead of kicker Tim Foley for second on the scoring list. To date, Peterson has rushed for 3,374 yards and scored 306 points during his 24 game career.

Adrian Peterson wasn't the only GSU player breaking records Saturday. Greg Hill made I-AA history with his 172 yards passing. The senior quarterback became the first I-AA player to surpass 3,000 yards in both rushing and passing in a career.

A week after being criticized by head coach Paul Johnson for not blocking well and for not holding on to the ball, the offense stepped up.

"I think [the offensive line] had a pretty good game," senior right guard Mark Williams said. "Maybe the last two weeks weren't where we wanted them, but I think, as a whole, the offense did well today."

"We played well today," Hill said. We had no turnovers, so that's a must. We feel that we're the only ones that can stop us. If we get our assignments right and don't turn the ball over, we can't be beat. As long as we take care of the ball and be where we're supposed to be, then we're pretty much unstoppable."

For Hill and the rest of the Eagles to win this week, they'll have to play by those words. Furman comes into Saturday's game at Paulson Stadium on top of the Southern Conference with a 6-0 conference record, 7-1 overall. The Paladins are flying high after this weekend's defeat of I-A North Carolina, 28-3.

G-A News Service

GREENVILLE, S.C. - The sixth-ranked Furman men's soccer team won its 14th Southern Conference championship with a 3-1 defeat of GSU Sunday at Eugene Stone Soccer Stadium.

With the win, the Paladins finish the regular season with a 15-1-1 record and a perfect 8-0 Southern Conference mark.

Freshman Anthony Esquivel scored the first goal of the match at the 11:06 mark off a double pass from Stephen Rodriguez and Daniel Alvarez. Alvarez then recorded his second assist of the night as he fed sophomore Matt Goldsmith for the second goal of the afternoon. The assist was the 12th of the season for Alvarez, tying the Furman single season assist record. Earlier this season, Alvarez became Furman's all-time leader in assists. He now has 37 assists for his career.

Freshman Michael Waite scored an unassisted goal at the 42:56 mark to give the Paladins the commanding 3-0 lead. The goal was Waite's first collegiate goal.

Several Paladins received playing time in the second half, but Furman was unable to add to its lead. GSU's Blake Bironas scored the Eagles' lone goal at the 67:57 mark off assists from Martin Cunningham and Jeff Russell.

"It is great to finish the regular season on a high note," said

"HOPEFULLY WE CAN CONTINUE THIS MOMENTUM INTO THE PLAYOFFS."
- DOUG ALLISON, FURMAN COACH

Furman head coach Doug Allison. "Hopefully we can continue this momentum into the playoffs."

Furman claims its ninth SoCon championship this decade and will enter the SoCon tournament as the top seed next weekend.

The win was the eight straight for the sixth-ranked Paladins. Furman is also ranked 7th in the NSCAA poll and 10th in Soccer Times.
