Soil-Water Conservation
By R. T. Squiers, M.D.

In the early days, when the pioneers came into the wilderness, they had to fight their way through the thickets and over the rugged terrain. They had to build their own homes, raise their own food, and be self-sufficient. Today, we have the convenience of modern technology, but we still need to be aware of the importance of soil and water conservation.

Soil and water are vital resources that are essential for the survival of all living creatures. Their health and well-being are closely connected to each other.

Soil is the foundation of life, providing food for plants and animals. It is made up of various minerals, organic matter, and water. It is the largest living structure on Earth, and it plays a critical role in the carbon cycle and water cycle.

Water is the most important resource for life. It is involved in all biological processes, including photosynthesis, respiration, and digestion. It is also necessary for the transport of nutrients and waste products.

Conserving soil and water resources is essential for sustainability and environmental protection. It helps preserve the natural balance of ecosystems and ensures the health of future generations.

Remember, every action counts.
Let's work together to protect our precious soil and water resources.
Auction Ail

STREET-STATESBORO, Georgia

On November 27-28, the Cooperative Livestock Exchange will host an auction at the Statesboro Fairgrounds. The auction features a wide selection of country hams, with prices starting at $20.00 per pound.

Four big reasons why FORD is outselling all other '59 cars:

- Better handling
- A.80c at 25th
- Extensive use of auto body and dry cleaning
- Side view mirrors
