COVERING THE CAMPUS LIKE A SWARM OF GNATS

School compost plans put on hold

By Chris Buchanan

Staff writer

Plans to compost on campus will have to wait due in large part to economic concerns, food services officials said yesterday.

"As with everything else in today's economy it's a matter of budget," Landrum General Manager Bob Miller said. "Where do we get the money to buy all the equipment and materials to make that work for us?"

The idea picked up steam when then grad student Tripp Eldridge spearheaded a feasibility study in February that involved several departments on campus. Eldridge said the idea originally came to light at a public meeting last summer.

"We delegated tasks to look into and explore," said Eldridge. "My area was to explore composting."

It was from this point that Eldridge began working toward the pilot program through a $3,000 sustainability grant through the Office of Sustainability.

Eldridge explained that he had previous experience with a composting program at Wilson College in Pennsylvania.

The project looked at the total waste being produced at three areas on campus. These included Landrum, Lakeside Café and the Russell Union.

According to the final report, Landrum created the highest weight of waste of the three areas at approximately 79 tons a year. The site also contained a conveyor system for disposal of trash. This became the site of the one-month pilot program to study the likelihood of a campus composting program.

NASA gives $1 million grant to Georgia Southern

By Tiffani Addison

Guest writer

A one million dollar grant from NASA is allowing Georgia Southern experts to participate in transforming the way Georgia public school students are taught astronomy.

Georgia Southern University, the Georgia Department of Education and Columbus State University partnered to form a project called "Georgians Experience Astronomy Research in Schools" (GEARS).

The grant will fund the development of a curriculum that will change the way astronomy is taught in public high schools in Georgia.

"This grant will revolutionize the way students learn astronomy because it will allow us to create a brand new curriculum," said GSU physics professor Sarah Higdon. "We'll create courses that will allow students to mine the NASA databases to make their own discoveries."

Higdon also said that this will be a rigorous course that will reach thousands of students in rural, urban, and suburban areas of the state of Georgia and may possibly lead some of the students into a career of physics or astronomy.

According to Higdon, at least one of these courses will be taught online. The students will work through real NASA simulations using actual data from NASA archives.

Along with developing the new curriculum, GSU will also play a major role in arming teachers with the skills and information they will need to teach the new material.

To prepare teachers for this opportunity Georgia Southern University will offer them workshops in the Physics Planetarium as well as on-line courses.

"We even plan to develop a network of Georgia Astronomy Resource Teachers by providing scholarships that will allow them to take the GSU online Space Science for Teachers course that we offer," said Higdon. "We want to do everything possible to ensure that this is an extraordinary educational experience for students and teachers."

Information about the GEARS project is available at <http://cheller.phy.georgiasouthern.edu/~shigdon/GEARS/GEARS.html>.

This site offers information on the mission of the project, previous progressions made throughout the projects development, information on the online course, a break-down of the focus of the teacher workshops, and an application for teachers, needed for astronomy research.

Official: 'We are reaching record numbers ...'

Summer 2009 enrollment estimated at approximately 10,000 students

By Tiffani Addison

Guest writer

Enrollment has reached a record high for the summer at GSU.

According to Vice President of Student Affairs Teresa Thompson, summer enrollment has reached approximately 10,000 students this year.

With fall enrollment reaching a record high of 17,000, as stated in GSU's factbook, it is no surprise that summer enrollment has reached a record high as well.

Within the United States, the majority out-of-state student enrollment generally comes from the states of South Carolina, Virginia and Florida.

Statistics show that a large part of enrollment here at GSU includes white, male, continuing students from the metro-Atlanta area. Most students are a part of the college of Liberal Arts and Social Sciences.

Dr. Teresa Thompson, vice president of Student Affairs, said summer enrollment has reached an all-time high in 2009.

The increase in enrollment has had both a positive and negative effect on GSU. The enrollment increase has attracted more students to Georgia Southern.

"Funding comes from credit hours and classes that students are enrolled in, therefore the more students enrolled, the better it is for the university," said Thompson.

Thompson also stated that a negative aspect of the vast enrollment numbers includes the need for more teachers and more classes.

GSU provides adequate amounts of housing, parking and other accommodations to students throughout the academic year, meaning, for the summer there are more than enough accommodations to the students as well. Pre-enrollment helps administration with enrollment issues.

"Academic affairs encourages students to enroll in summer classes so that they may graduate sooner," said Thompson.

With enrollment throughout the academic year constantly increasing there will continue to be an increase in summer enrollment.

"More and more students see the value of attending GSU and attending summer school," said Thompson.

"This is a good time to be at GSU. We are reaching record numbers, and the school is constantly improving and growing," she said.

Since fall 2007 there have been increased enrollments from students from other countries, such as, Nigeria, India, China, and Canada.

American Red Cross plans two donor appreciation days in next two weeks

Kristin Crowder

Guest writer

Blood is in high demand in the summer months, especially here at Georgia Southern and the local Statesboro area. Blood drives on campus were in full swing during Fall and Spring semesters, but due to lack of students and involvement of campus organizations, the number of blood collected has dwindled, but not the demand.

Nancy Martin, senior account manager for the American Red Cross Blood Services, encourages people interested in donating blood to attend the Red Cross's Donor Appreciation Days that will be held June 18 and June 24 to encourage new and old donors' participation.

A blood drive on campus last week sponsored by Theta Xi produced 26 units of blood, which according to Martin, is significant.

"A 20-to-25 unit blood drive can provide over 75 blood products, and we would be happy to see that at the Appreciation Day," she said.

Donor Appreciation day will be at East Georgia Regional Medical Center in the Medical Center on June 18 from noon to 6 p.m. and June 24 at the First Baptist Church from noon to 6 p.m. also.

Reasons for blood shortages range from lack of donors to potential donors not meeting certain criteria. According to Martin, people who have gotten tattoos within the last year will have to wait at least 12 months in the state of Georgia before donating blood. Jasmine Stewart, a junior, said she was encouraged to eat more foods rich in iron before her next attempt to give blood.

According to the American Red Cross Web site, just about everyone can do it. Only 3 out of 100 Americans give blood, according to the site.

Martin and other avid donors hope to increase that number following the Appreciation Day and scheduled blood drives in the near future.

"We have an emergency need for Type O and Type B bloods right now," said Martin.

"Our next blood drive isn't scheduled until August, but hopefully, we can encourage more participation at the Blood Donor Appreciation Day," said Martin.

Sponsors for the Donor Appreciation Day include RJ's Steakhouse, University Tire, and Brewster's Ice Cream.

Brewster's Ice Cream is donating a pint of ice cream for every pint of blood donated. There will be registration for a cruise for two as well at the event for donors who give blood.

GSU freshmen swarm campus

SOAR introduces students, parents to Southern living

Tiffani Addison

Guest writer

Campus has been swarming with new faces this week due to the summer orientation for incoming students.

Approximately 2,600 students are attending summer 2009 Southern's Orientation Advisement and Registration sessions. SOAR is currently in its third of nine freshmen and three transfer sessions.

Freshmen sessions include two-day sessions where the future students stay overnight at Southern Pines residence hall and get a feel of residence living and campus. The transfer sessions include registration and advisement.

Throughout the sessions students participate in several activities such as the "Student Services Browse," where student IDs are made and set-up's in the Russell Union Commons display information on Health Services, Greek Life, the Student Multicultural Center and many more.

"First Night Out," held at the RAC, is an alternative afternoon activity for students once the schedule is completed.

There is also a program known as the "Making Connections Fair," (MCF), a fair where students get to meet and explore organizations on campus and mix, mingle and make connections with their peers.

MeShae Hankerson, a junior public relations major and SOAR leader said that they average approximately 335 students per SOAR session.

Assistant Director of Admissions Orientation and Parent Programs, Erin Campbell, said, "This summer we show five skits in the evening, put on by SOAR leaders, portraying homesickness, roommate conflict, diversity, alcohol, and responsibility."

"SOAR is required for all new students to welcome and introduce them to current students, faculty and staff, get registered and advised for the

...WHERE WE ARE CURRENTLY THINKING OF
POOL DAYS WITH COLD DRINKS. AHHHHH, SUMMER...

Where could we be without SOAR?

Once summer begins, it is almost eerie. Wal-Mart lines are shorter. There is no line at the campus Chick-fil-A. The campus looks empty, and Statesboro becomes a ghost town for the students.

However, there are a few times during the summer that something happens. People are crowding into Starbucks. New, and rather young-looking faces roaming the sidewalks with their shiny nametags. These kids are the upcoming freshman to Georgia Southern. The SOAR kids.

When coming upon the acronym SOAR, there may be a sense of nostalgia. Who could forget the weird feeling of being in a new place and knowing that it could be your new home for four years?

The SOAR leaders are another memory that may come to mind when one thinks back to their SOAR experience. These are the first impression that most students really have before beginning their life at GSU. At the time, it feels like those leaders are the unreachable. They are the people who are so dedicated to their college that they stay for the entire summer to show new students what GSU really is, and how to get involved.

If one really thinks about it, this first impression of the SOAR leaders isn't too far off the map. The students that join the SOAR team are those who show leadership skills, and aren't afraid to show them off to the hundreds of kids that attend SOAR each summer.

True, having kids come through SOAR can be a disruption to the empty campus, but it shouldn't be an unwelcomed one.

These new freshmen are providing opportunities for current students to get involved. Students can join SOAR. They can encourage the organizations they are apart of to talk to future students attending SOAR.

So, maybe SOAR students aren't so bad after all.

Submission of Letters to the Editor

The George-Anne Daily welcomes letters to the editor, story submissions and guest columns. All copy submitted should be 350 words or less, typed, and sent via e-mail in Microsoft Word format to gaeditor@georgiasouthern.edu or via facebook to Claire Gallam. All submissions must be signed and include phone number for verification. GSU students should include their academic major, year at GSU, and hometown. The editors reserve the right to edit or reject any submission.

With this economy, opt for a saving theory

Kristin Crowder is a senior Communication Arts major from Marietta, Ga. She is a guest columnist for the George-Anne.

Since the economy is in complete shambles now and we probably won't see the light at the end of the tunnel for quite some time, I have opted for a new money-saving theory. I have recently taken to a saving process that requires me to save one-third of my total income. For every paycheck that I receive this summer, I will attempt the save-spend-blow theory.

Let's do the math: If I earn, for instance, a $300 paycheck, I will save $100 of it, spend $100 on total necessities, and blow $100 of it on anything that pleases me.

Now, in a perfect world, free from rent, car insurance, cell phone bills, tuition, books, clothing, food, water, Snickers, and loan repayments, which are all necessities in my life, that list would compensate one-third of my income. In a perfect world. But since I am writing this in 2009 amidst one of the nation's worst financial crises known to mankind, where phrases like 'We're in a recession' and 'We're going bankrupt' are typical water cooler conversation, I, like many other people, will end up ditching my latest campaign at fractional saving. So I advise this instead.

First, cut out unnecessary spending. If you opt to get a manicure and pedicure every two weeks, try instead to do it yourself at home. A few lemon slices on the top of discolored nails will drastically change the color of nails usually drenched in harmful enamel and acrylic, ladies. That will save the average bear over $50 every two weeks that could be used for saving.

If you spend a heavy chunk of your hard-earned cash at the bars during the Happy Hour, opt to stay at home and enjoy your beverage of choice with a group of friends. You don't have to worry about tipping a bartender or buying the cutie pie you've been eyeballing all night a drink so they will like you. Depending on your spending habits, this could save you an astounding $70 a week.

And if you are at all like me and enjoy others cooking your food for you at a restaurant, try as hard as you can to stay in for dinner. You can spend about $20 at Wal-Mart or Bi-Lo and have a meal for at least three days. 20$ can only go so far at a restaurant, and that is of course, not including the tip for you waiter or waitress.

Understanding that the college wallet is probably below the poverty line these days, I don't expect miracles. Honestly, I am tired of working day and night at school and work and not having two dimes to rub together at the end of the day. Granted, everyone deserves to get a pedicure, or a night out at a fancy restaurant, but until that time comes where I have a consistent paycheck direct deposited with multiple commas and even more zeroes, I will adopt some system of saving. But I will not budge on the Snickers.

"Rock of Love" star has a rock-hard head

Alli Brenner is a senior journalism major from Marietta, Ga. She is a guest columnist for the George-Anne.

Bret Michaels, lead singer of 80s rock band Poison, performed along with the cast of Broadway's "Rock of Ages" at the 63rd Tony Awards, which was hosted by Neil Patrick Harris.

The performance ended with a bang when Michaels missed his mark and was hit in the head by a piece of scenery while jumping onto a platform at the end of his song.

The rocker fractured his nose and needed three stitches in his lip after the incident.

It would be interesting to know if Michael's made sure the instruments in the hospital were sterile; after all, it doesn't make much of a difference given the girls that are throwing themselves on him on his "Rock of Love Tour Bus" show on VH1.

Anyway, he has taken himself from "has been" to "drama-filled reality star."

Bravo Bret Michaels. You and your bandana have officially re-made a name for yourself.

'The Hangover' may be the funniest movie of the year

By Ryan Babula
Staff writer

When you think of a hangover, usually a blinding headache mixed with nausea and slight memory loss comes to mind. It's not a welcome consequence, but nevertheless is a mark of a really good time.

The three guys in "The Hangover" experience all of the above, but over the course of a very long day find a tiger, carry around a lost baby, meet Mike Tyson, and get caught up with Asian gangsters, all the while trying to find their best friend. Never has a hangover been so welcome and hysterically funny.

"The Hangover" follows the tried and true formula of the Vegas movie, where whatever happens will happen, and the bachelor party movie.

This could have been a tired case of same old, same old, but director Todd Phillips and the entire cast raise the material and craft a seriously funny movie.

By framing it as a mystery, the film is constantly engaging, and you even begin to worry as to where the missing groom-to-be is.

Bradley Cooper (Phil) is the ringleader of the group, and takes being a self-aware jerk to new heights. He's a character that's fairly amoral, but when it comes down to the task at hand, is very committed to helping his friends.

Starring (from left) Zach Galifianakis, Bradley Cooper, and Ed Helms, 'The Hangover' provides the audience with a never-ending series of hilarious and often unexpected events that keep you either on the edge of your seat or rolling on the floor.

Ed Helms (Stu) plays the one character in the group with an actual story arc, as he undergoes the most change along the story.

I like Helms from "The Office," and I was happy to say that I was surprised by his outlandish performance as the film goes on.

The best actor in the film, though, is Zach Galifianakis (Alan). He plays the odd man out, and simply wants to be liked and involved by Phil and Stu.

He is obscene, crude, and maybe even a little wrong in the head, but his endearing attempts to help and be included make him the star player in the film.

When you break it down, "The Hangover" is really just a series of hilarious events with great performances and some truly memorable scenes.

It may be the funniest film of the year, but we'll have to see after Judd Apatow's "Funny People."

Eagles rank top 25 in pre-season poll

Eagles ranked 20th by Lindy's and 24th by Athlon

By Thom Cunningham
Sports Editor

The Georgia Southern Eagles, who went 6-5 last season, have been ranked in the FCS top 25 rankings by three different sports publications.

The Eagles were ranked 20th nationally by Lindy's and Sporting News while receiving a number 24 ranking in Athlon. Georgia Southern returns 17 starters (seven offense, seven defense, three special teams) and 44 letterwinners from last year's 6-5 team.

GSU will be facing five opponents who also appear on these pre-season rankings.

Appalachian State, who went undefeated in the SoCon last year, is ranked as the top team in most polls.

South Dakota State is ranked only in Lindy's top 25.

They are currently ranked 11th and lost to GSU 41-38 last time they played in 2007.

Wofford, on the other hand, is only ranked in Sporting News' and Athlon's top 25.

The Terriers are ranked in the top 20 for both rankings, and finished '08 season with a 9-3 record.

The first SoCon team ranked in all three pre-season rankings are the Elon Phoenix.

The Phoenix recorded an 8-4 record last year and is ranked as high as no. 9 this pre-season.

Brand new SoCon member Samford is the fifth and final opponent the Eagles face in 2009 that is ranked in the pre-season top 25.

The Bulldogs are only ranked in Sporting News and they are the no. 23 team.

The Eagles begin regular season play on Saturday, Sept. 5. It is Junior Eagle Club Day as well as Faculty and Staff Day.
