Student remembered Cause of death still under investigation

By JESSIE REESE

George-Anne staff

On Oct. 20 at 1 p.m., East Georgia student Andrew Lauder passed away in his apartment at the Avenue at Southern.

The cause of death has not yet been confirmed. The case has been turned over to the Criminal Investigation Bureau, according to an incident report from the Statesboro Police Department.

"We responded to the Avenue at Southern in reference to a possible deceased person. The case is currently under investigation," said Statesboro Police Captain Scott Brunson.

"I unfortunately went to his house and found him that day around 1 p.m. I called 911 and then started CPR. They tried to walk me through it over the phone, but then the ambulance got there and they said he was gone," said Jeremy Hill, a senior general studies major at Georgia Southern University. "They said he had a history of seizures, but I know he had meds for it. They're thinking that his death was most likely related to the seizures."

"It was just one of those awful situations. He was a best friend to me. We both got down here in the fall of 2007, and we worked together throwing events in the Statesboro area, Atlanta and Savannah and that's how we met each other," said Hill.

Faculty concerned by dean's leadership

BY ARIELLE COAMBES

Dean of the College of Liberal Arts and Social Sciences Michael Smith distributed army leadership manuals to each chair in CLASS this semester, causing faculty concern over his leadership style.

The US Army Leadership Field Manual, which emphasizes direct, first-line leadership, is for face-to-face leaders, according to the book's description.

"I think it's very authoritarian. I think it's a very top-down sort of model and I don't think that's appropriate for an academic community," said an anonymous faculty member in the department of political science. "I think academic communities are supposed to be characterized by the freedom of thought and the freedom to defend when appropriate as opposed to the idea that individuals should

Student organizations to merge

Eagle Entertainment and Traditions Council will combine in 2012

By COURTNEY TIELKING

George-Anne contributor

Eagle Entertainment and Traditions Council will merge into one organization in January to generate higher participation and to utilize funds.

"We come from the same budget, so it just makes sense. The merge will make things run more smoothly. All events will still be here, they will just be under one name. We're also keeping all of our members," said Brittany Bullock, vice president of Traditions Council.

Laila Abdallah, membership coordinator of Eagle Entertainment, said that the two organizations have been working together for a while.

"We work really close to each other all the time. We've worked in the same office for years and we share the same resources," said Abdallah.

A name for the merged organization has not been decided upon yet because the name "Eagle Entertainment" has been paid for and trademarked, said Abdallah.

The consensus was reached by both organizations. With recent cuts in funding the decision was clear, said Bullock and Abdallah.

"Every decision we were able to make together," said Abdallah. "There have been a lot of budget cuts at Georgia Southern. It was silly for us to split things when we could just work together and make better use of the money."

"I think that the merge is really smart. They can do more things and make our student activity fee dollars stretch farther," said Savanna Ullman, sophomore psychology major.

The merge will yield more involvement and will better inform students of the events, said Abdallah.

"Some of the Traditions Council's events aren't well known to students because they tend to think that tradition isn't as fun as entertainment, but Traditions Council has really, really cool events so if we can have PR on both ends we'll have more participation," said Abdallah.

The intention of the merge is not for one organization to prevail, but for both organizations to benefit, said Abdallah. All members will still have a position even after the two groups join together.

"Basically what we're doing is incorporating everybody that we have. Everybody will have a role. No one is going to lose their job. The ones in leadership might have different roles, or different titles, but nobody is losing their job," said Abdallah.

Both organizations feel as though they will be able to better serve the student body after they start working under the same name.

"Our main goal is to provide entertainment," said Bullock. "Even though we are traditions based, we provide entertainment and even though Eagle Entertainment is entertainment based, their activities become traditions."

major from Atlanta.

"He was a student at East Georgia but he was taking classes on-campus. He wasn't that involved on-campus, but I know how I'm feeling right now is how a lot of other people are feeling on-campus. Drew reached a whole outside part of campus. He was involved with students on-campus and also students at East Georgia and students in the community. He was always out having a good time somewhere," said Hill.

"He was just an all around good guy. He was one of the most trustworthy and honest people I have ever met. He told it how he saw it and didn't sugar coat anything. (His death) has been hanging over everything. It's been kind of tough to deal with," said Hill.

Hill said the service will be held Saturday at 11 a.m. at Rainbow Park Baptist Church in Decatur. The first viewing will be Friday from 5 p.m. to 8 p.m. in Eternal Hills Funeral Home in Snellville on U.S. Highway 78. The second viewing is Friday from 9 to 11 a.m. before the funeral.

Our View Career fair should cater to more majors

The Eagle Career Fair, held by the Office of Career Services, occurred yesterday at 10 a.m. at the Recreation Activities Center.

The event hosted companies like Aflac, Target, Wells Fargo, Goodrich, and Verizon.

Despite the increasing student population at Georgia Southern University, the number of employers attending the Eagle Expo Career Fair is decreasing.

According to Heather Scarboro, recruitment coordinator of the office of career services, there were 800 students last year and 70 plus employers in the spring, now only 48 employers attended.

The Eagle Expo Career Fair should make changes in the future to include more employers to match the diversity of majors at GSU.

Based on the employers who attend the Eagle Expo Career fair, there is not sufficient representation available for students who are liberal arts majors.

Students within those majors deserve to be able to attend the fair and feel like they are being represented adequately.

These students who are not apart of the science or technology fields have to search harder to find available jobs and internships. This addition to the career fair would help liberal arts majors in their job search.

If the Eagle Expo Career Fair were to include more employers that catered to liberal arts majors that could also solve the issue of a decrease in employers attending the fair and could increase student attendance.

Because getting students employed is one of the career fair's main purposes this change should be made to satisfy the needs of all GSU students.

As a university that is ranked as one of the highest in the U.S., students who attend should be able to go to a career fair where their major or field is accurately represented.

GSU should compromise on tobacco policy for all students

The Staff Council sent out an online survey to measure student's thoughts on tobacco use on campus last week.

The results of the survey will be used to help Staff Council determine what the next step should be in the process they began in the fall semester of 2010 to make Georgia Southern University's campus tobacco free.

Personally, I am not a smoker and I do not appreciate being exposed to cigarette smoke on a daily basis just for walking to my classes.

Students who wish to endanger their health by smoking cigarettes have that right when they are over

JENNIFER CURRINGTON/
NEWS EDITOR

18 years of age, however, I feel that students also have the right to breathe clean, fresh air.

Making GSU a tobacco free campus would not upset me, since I am a non-smoker. However, I do think that making GSU campus tobacco free could impede on the rights of some students that wish to smoke on a cancer stick.

I think the best way for a compromise to be reached for all is to have heavily enforced smoking areas.

These smoking areas should be clearly marked and a comfortable location for students who wish to smoke. If an area designated for smokers does not provide benches or does not provide coverage for students on rainy days, then the area will not be utilized.

For students that do not wish to be exposed to smoke and health hazards, the smoking areas should be far away enough from the sidewalks so that it does not interfere with the health of others.

The survey also asks students about their feelings of what tobacco products do for the environment.

I think it is rude and an insult to GSU and its groundskeepers when smokers drop their cigarette butts wherever they please.

Also, walking along the sidewalk and having to avoid a big lump of dip that someone decided to leave behind for all the pedestrians is disgusting and unfair for students that enjoy a clean campus. If GSU becomes tobacco free then dip would also become outlawed on campus.

Therefore, the smoking areas I previously mentioned should accommodate students who wish to use smokeless tobacco.

I would not want rights that I feel I have earned to be taken away, so I don't think the same should happen to my fellow students.

GSU should provide a compromise for everyone's health and the cleanliness of campus.

America must unite for strength

Last night while I was channel surfing, I stumbled upon a late night preacher talking about how great America was and if we needed proof to just look at the Pledge of Allegiance.

Not the guy dressing up in all American flag apparel, but the actual words that we said everyday before school, a government function, or in my case College Republicans meeting.

This made me think and look back on it and actually think about what each word meant. I'd like to take the time to share with you what I found.

"I": a body of one, individual.

"Pledge": a solemn promise or undertaking, given as a token of love, favor or loyalty.

"Allegiance": loyalty or commitment given to a superior entity.

"To the flag": Old Glory, our standard and symbol of freedom. "Of the United States of America": a coming together of 50 individual communities to make one great nation.

"And to the Republic for which she stands": a group of officials elected to represent the people whom elected them, because power comes from the people to the officials and not the other way around.

"One nation": a single large aggregate of people who share a common decent, history, culture, or language and inhabit a particular country or territory.

"Under God": a nation protected and guided by a supreme being, whether they be real or metaphoric.

"Indivisible": unable to be separated from its counterparts for any reason.

"With liberty": the state of being free within society from oppressive restrictions imposed by authority on one's way of life, behavior or political views, the power or scope to act as one pleases.

"And justice": the quality of being fair and reasonable, the administration of the law or authority in maintaining this.

"For all": refers to the whole quantity or extent of a particular group or thing.

This pledge is what America is about at it's core. It's a statement saying that no matter what, we are all Americans and regardless of political or religious affiliation, point of view or any other dividing factor.

While we have the wonderful freedom to express all these things, we need to do so in a way that doesn't polarize people. We need to remember this now more than ever as our country continues to slip into mediocrity.

We need to do as we do in times of emergency and band together and stand strong as a country just as we did that terrible September morning in 2001.

If we can't do that, then we might as well accept the defeat of America and watch this great country fall by the wayside.

Chapin is a political science major from Roswell, Ga.

Americans need better paying jobs

If you plan on being in the top one percent, congratulations because the average household income has tripled over the past three decades.

The middle class income grew by just 40 percent since the 1970s and has fallen by seven percent in the past decade.

The American middle class is fading and fast. The poverty rating has risen to include 15.1 percent of Americans.

It is obvious that the recession has hit the lowest earners the hardest, while the richer groups have prospered during these hard times.

CNN Money reports that 14.2 percent of people ages 25 to 34 are living with their parents, compared to the 11.8 percent it was before the recession started in 2007.

If our young people can't get out of their parents' homes and become successful, what hope is there for them to build up our diminishing middle class?

We already knew there were no jobs, but we're learning now that within the coming decades, that we will no longer be able to identify as wealthy, middle class or impoverished.

Prices are rising for homes, healthcare, college, groceries, gas and movies. With the rising prices it is the lower income individuals will be hit the hardest and feel the most adverse effects.

The middle class average income has increased by 40 percent over the past three decades compared to the 275 percent increase the top one percent has seen.

We need jobs, and better paying jobs. The economy needs to be stabilized so we can reduce inflation.

Roberts is a senior public relations major from Warner Robins, Ga.

Letters to Editor

Iraq is now ready to stand alone as a sovereign nation

Dear Editor,

The George-Anne published an editorial by Fritz Chapin criticizing the President's decision to withdraw troops from Iraq.

He argued that Iraq does not have enough military power to defend itself from Iran or terrorists. If we withdraw, according to Chapin, extremists will "take over and begin a new dictatorial regime." He argues that the real reason for the withdrawal is to increase the President's poll numbers.

If this is true, the military power of Iraq today must be less than what it would have been if we had not invaded. If the Iraqi military is in the same shape or better than we can justify a withdrawal.

Before the war, Fox News reported that Iraq's air force only had 132 aircrafts; most which were built prior to the 1980s. The army had 350,000 poorly trained soldiers. Its reported purpose was "to prevent popular uprisings" and was "suffering serious equipment losses, damage to production facilities and continuing supply problems."

A Global Securities report stated that the Iraqi navy was inoperable, unable for use in training exercises. Was Iraq ready to defend itself from Iran in 2003? Would it be ready today if it had continued on this path?

CIA reports show that the Iraqi military today is stronger than it was in 2003. The air force has over 200 workable aircrafts, with U.S. trained pilots. The army has over 270,000 active personnel, trained with a program developed by our military.

The navy has 15 working ships that serve in defending the shore of Iraq. So, is the Iraqi military more prepared today as a regional hegemon than under Saddam? The evidence appears to show that the Iraqi military is in better shape today than it would be otherwise.

By moving almost all troops out of Iraq, we are not abandoning our new ally, we are simply allowing the government to control itself and protect itself.

Obama does not have plans to withdraw all troops from the Middle East. In the event Iran was to attack Iraq, we would come to their aid - like when Iraq attacked Kuwait in the early 1990s.

Anti-semitic claim made is invalid

Dear Editor,

I would like to respond to writer Fritz Chapin's article stating that Occupy Wall Street is Anti-Semitic. I say as a Jew that Chapin's claim is utterly bull.

This is perpetuated by right wing pundits, like Glenn Beck, a man who offended many people in the Jewish community for his innuendo that Jewish billionaire, George Soros collaborated with Nazis as a youth and accused The Union of Reform Judaism of being primarily political rather than religious.

When an open letter criticizing his statements signed by several rabbis, including the rabbi that guided me at my Bar Mitzvah, was sent to him it was callously dismissed as a 'George Soros plot to discredit him'.

The only major Jewish commentator making this claim is Bill Kristol, a man who advocated the nomination of Sarah Palin for vice president in 2008 (who's comments about small towns being the "real America" hurt the McCain campaign in my community). Please Mr. Chapin be original.

Also, I would bring up that Jews have participating in the protest and have practiced.

I could bring up my brethren who have engaged in our sacred rites and services. A Kol Nidre service that was attended by 700 Jews in New York, a number larger than many synagogues as reported by The Jewish Daily Forward, was held by a Jewish Occupy Wall Street "Occupy Judaism."

Also during the holiday of Sukkot, tents celebrating the holiday called Sukkahs sprang up and were used by Jewish OWSers provided by the Hasidic group CHABAD.

While there are Anti-Semites in the crowds their signs are often tailed by signs saying things like 'This Does Not Represent Us.'

A Proud Jew,
Merritt Skidmore-Hess

Gender is important

Dear Editor,

First of all I'd like to say that the article The George-Anne published in Tuesday's paper on the Gay Prom was great. It's lovely to see the paper covering LGBT events and issues.

However, I do have one problem with the article. I was quoted but the article used female pronouns for me.

As someone who is a female-to-male transgender person it hurt to be incorrectly identified like that and it took my statement out of context.

I believe I told the person who took my statement that I am transgender and if I did not I apologize. If you are not aware of what transgender means, it means that my gender identity does not match my biological sex.

I considered not writing this letter in fear of what responses I might get but I realized that no one else should be able to dictate my gender identity or pronouns, even if it is an honest mistake.

As someone who is male-identified, uses a male name and presents myself as male, I feel I have the right to have people use my preferred pronouns concerning me. And this publication is no exception.

GSU

SGA to provide shuttles for Sunday shopping

By TAYLOR COOPER
George-Anne Contributor

Beginning spring semester, shuttles will take students from Southern Pines to Wal-Mart on Sunday using the Shuttle GUS program.

Student Government Association will use the cars they already rent from Enterprise for the Shuttle GUS program on Friday and Saturday night for the Sunday shuttles, said Dominique Quarles, vice president of finance for SGA.

"It won't require any additional funds. We'll use cars that we already have that are just sitting around on Sundays," said Alton Standifer, president of SGA.

The Shuttle GUS service is paid for through student activity fees, said Vice President of Auxiliary Affairs for SGA Garrett Green.

"The majority of the time we get at least five-seaters. We get about four or five cars that can carry five or more," said Green.

SGA is working out the details for a shuttle route that will take students to Wal-Mart from Southern Pines, said Quarles.

"This is all projected. It's not solid. They're projected to run to and from Wal-Mart from 2-6 p.m.," said Quarles. "Every 45 minutes someone will be leaving Southern Pines and driving to Wal-Mart and vice versa. You have the option to stay at Wal-Mart for 45 minutes, one hour and 30 minutes, two hours and 15 minutes, etc."

Students don't have to worry about how to get to Pines either, said Quarles.

"The plan is to have three (shuttles) going to Wal-Mart and the rest picking people up from their apartment and going to Pines or taking them from Pines to their apartments to drop off their groceries," said Quarles.

The shuttles are driven by students organizations that sign up to do so, said Green.

Tyler Fleider/STAFF

"Organizations sign up to drive the shuttles for a weekend and earn money that way. They would be driven by the organization that drives the Shuttle GUS that weekend," said Green.

We probably won't be giving the organizations any more money because we feel like $300 is enough to drive a car for a few hours on the weekend," said Green.

SGA rents four or five cars from Enterprise every weekend for use by Shuttle GUS, said Standifer.

Several students think the Sunday shuttles are a great idea.

"I think it'd be great. A ton of my friends don't have cars, so they get rides from me," said Alex Jameson, sophomore computer science major.

"I just lost my car," said Toan Tran, junior biochemistry major. "I really need a ride, I've been relying on my roommates for rides."

"I've seen a lot of people riding bikes to Wal-Mart, it'll make it safer for them, and it will help a lot of freshmen stuck on campus," said Hannah Oswalt, sophomore pre-nursing major.

Luigi Clendening, senior general studies major said, "I think it's awesome. Statesboro is pretty big, if you don't have a car you're stuck on campus."

Other CLASS faculty agreed with the anonymous political science professor, calling the CLASS environment militant. Most CLASS faculty members remained anonymous to protect their positions at Georgia Southern University.

"I am very concerned that the administrative culture here is changing," said professor Debra Sabia, who has a Ph.D in political science. "We have had a long tradition in the academy that has embraced a shared governance model, a model that is transparent, democratic and inclusive. The last time I saw the military in action, that model was not democratic, inclusive and transparent."

However, other faculty members found the manual and Smith's leadership style effective.

"What I appreciate is that our dean is working to talk about leadership and develop leadership among his chairs," said David Dudley, chair of the department of literature and philosophy. "I've heard people say okay, so it's a militant leadership style. I think it shows maybe, kind of a no-nonsense style."

During their last meeting, Smith instructed CLASS chairs to begin reading the manual, said Dudley.

"We had an hour-long discussion about some of the principals of leadership that are outlined in that manual. I don't recall that I agree with every single point, but it talks about different levels of leadership. It talks about taking care of your people. It talks about integrity and fairness and all of that, so I've got no problem with it," said Dudley.

Concerns like these have been aired multiple times this semester, first after the removal of former political science department chair Richard Pacelle and then after the political science department took a motion of no confidence in Smith.

"What makes the environment hostile? A lack of civility by leaders who should know better," said the anonymous faculty members of CLASS.

Provost Ted Moore, at that time, responded to the concerned faculty of CLASS's grievances against Smith.

"The reaction by some Departmental faculty . . . is misguided and contrary to responsible university governance," said Moore in an email to CLASS faculty.

The concerned CLASS faculty said they found Moore's response insulting and inaccurate.

The concerned faculty of CLASS said, "Many, many departments in this College have unique and significant grievances against Dean Smith."

GSU discourages profanity at football games

By AMBER GORDON

George-Anne contributor

On Oct. 15, students were escorted out of the Georgia Southern University football game vs. Furman University for using profanity in their cheers.

"As a member of the community, I believe that everything Georgia Southern does affects everyone else," said Assistant Dean of Judicial Affairs Patrice Buckner. "By chanting obscenities at the game, we are portraying a certain picture of what we think is okay. I believe that we can find other ways to communicate our passion in football without the need for obscene language."

The incident could be considered as disorderly conduct based on the student conduct handbook said Buckner.

The crowd should not have used profanity when cheering at the game because of the family environment, said GSU parent Darron Miles.

"I understand that it's a college campus, but typically families come down for the football games and with all the little kids running around, it starts to become a problem," said Miles. "You would think that at this level of football, there would be a higher level of maturity from the crowd."

There should be a limit to the profanity used in cheering, said senior philosophy major Wes Green.

"If you're at a private place, it's fine. However, if you're in a public place where there are kids and family around, then you should still be able to say what you want, but it has to be censored," said Green.

Even though the code applies everywhere, it rarely becomes an issue during football games, said Buckner.

Students should be removed from the game for using profane language, said several students and parents.

"Technically, we've already paid for the football games even though we only use our ID so (students) should definitely be warned first," said senior information technology

Lindsay Hartmann/STAFF

major Chris Walker. "If it doesn't stop, though, then the people who started it should definitely be escorted out of the game."

Some students believe that there shouldn't be any punishment concerning cheering at football games.

"No, I don't think students should be punished for using profanity while cheering," said freshman computer science major David Fitzsimmons. "I mean, we're at a football game so it should definitely be within a student's right to trash talk."

Coach Young has high expectations for Eagles

Men's basketball

By CLINTON HINELY

George-Anne contributor

The Georgia Southern University men's basketball team looks to veteran leadership and young talent for the upcoming season.

The basketball team has been stuck in a rebuilding process over the past few seasons, but with new talent and now having young players with game experience, the Eagles have big dreams for the upcoming 2011-2012 season.

"We have some really good young talent," said head coach Charlton Young. "I don't think many people know that Jelani Hewitt, who was a freshman last year, led all freshmen in the country in steals, or that Eric Ferguson was the 19th rated freshman in the country and is a legitimate NBA prospect."

The Eagles will receive a boost this year in returning senior guard Willie Powers, who was out all of last year due to a torn ACL.

"Willie Powers went down before the season ever started — never played a game, which really hurts," said Young. "It was a huge injury to have to try and overcome, and we have had to overcome so much adversity since we've gotten here."

Powers's return also aids senior guard Ben Drayton, who together could form the best backcourt in the Southern Conference.

"This season is about those two seniors," said Young. "With everything those guys have gone through, with injuries and coaching changes, they deserve to ride out of here on their white horse. We plan to send them out the right way, by winning a championship and hanging a banner in Hanner."

The two senior guards will receive help from a sophomore class that got a lot of needed game experience last year.

"Eric Ferguson, Jelani Hewitt, and Marvin Baynham as sophomores are bigger, better and stronger. That whole freshman class got a lot of cooperative education last year and was thrown into the fire, so they are going to be a lot better this season," said coach Young.

A group of talented freshman will also have the opportunity to aid the team.

"The incoming freshman class has a chance to help us," said Young. "But, the beauty of it is that they are talented, but we don't have to depend on freshman anymore."

The whole conference is very strong and competitive throughout, but a couple of tough teams lost a significant amount of depth and talent from their graduating classes.

Coach Young said that Wofford College, The Citadel and Furman University lost some key players, and that's good news for GSU.

"Every year we expect to win a Southern Conference championship. We didn't have the greatest year last year, but the good news is we are a totally different basketball family than we were a year ago," said Young. "We are bigger, faster, stronger and we have more depth and veteran leadership."

The Eagles have two exhibition games at home against Voorhees College and Paine College respectively on Oct. 27 and Nov. 4 before beginning the new season against Valparaiso University in Hanner Fieldhouse at 7:30 p.m. on Nov. 11.

Eagles defeated by Bulldogs 3-1

Volleyball

By COLIN RITSICK

George-Anne contributor

'Dig - Pink' Breast Cancer Awareness weekend opened up with a loss for the Georgia Southern University volleyball team against Samford University at Hanner Fieldhouse on Saturday night.

"We just need to execute better," coach Chad Callihan said shortly after his team's nail-biting loss to the Bulldogs 3-1.

The Eagles had several unforced errors against the Bulldogs, a team that boasts of some skilled players in FCS volleyball. For example Lauren Hutchinson, last week's Southern Conference Player of the Week, as well as touting the nation's leading hitting percentage at .448, in addition to Katie Murphy who is right behind Hutchinson in the ranks with a .440 percentage.

Despite the daunting numbers against the Eagles, GSU came out of the gate on fire and playing point for point with Samford. An already large and loud crowd of 350 became even more active during the first set while the teams traded leads. Both teams had multiple set points at the end, but eventually the Bulldogs' attackers wore out the Eagles' defense, winning the set 31-29.

"We need to work on our blocking and defense and executing more," sophomore middle blocker Enjoli Johnson said.

In the second set GSU was simply outplayed by a bigger, smoother Samford squad; dropping the set 16-25.

"We weren't as clean and crisp as we needed to be, and that's kind of been a theme this season," coach

Callihan said in regards to how his team handled the game.

Despite being down two sets to none, the Eagles came out of the locker room ready to bounce back. GSU played a stellar third set, overcoming more lead changes to come out on top, 25-23. The Eagles took the set mostly due to timely digs and emphatic kills off of the hands of senior Hannah Nelson, senior Bethany Sanford and Johnson.

The level of energy reached a maximum during the fourth set. As with the first and third sets, GSU was playing back-and-forth with the Bulldogs. However Samford's attackers proved yet again to be too much for the Eagles' defense. Samford polished off the final set 25-23 with an emphatic kill delivered by junior Elizabeth Niesler.

The Iron Eagle Challenge tests racers' mental and physical strength throughout the event.

Iron Eagle Challenge to be held this Friday

By BRIAN STONE

George-Anne contributor

Southern Adventures will host the seventh annual Iron Eagle Challenge on Friday, Oct. 29 from 3 to 6 p.m.

In the past, the Iron Eagle Challenge has been compared to the television show "The Amazing Race," with competitors having to complete both physical and mental challenges.

"You have to be willing to expand your horizons. There is a lot of non-traditional type of training that goes into this," said Adam Sardinha, a marketing graduate assistant for Campus Recreation and Intramurals. "To do the challenge, competitors' cardiovascular conditioning needs to be in check. The race is super intense."

While most of the mental challenges remain a mystery until the race, the physical challenges will include biking, running and canoeing.

"People doing the challenge need to be in decent shape," said CRI graduate assistant Jenn Velie. "Competitors need to bring a bike, and be ready to have fun."

Competitors will need a cycling helmet and a partner to compete. Bikes can be rented from Southern Adventures for the challenge.

The race will be done in two person teams, and teamwork will play a very important part in the Iron Eagle Challenge.

"Everything is done in partners," said Velie. "Nothing in the challenge is really done individually. Competitors have to be able to rely on their teammates."

The mental challenges have been varied in the past, and will not be revealed until the race.

"The mental part of the Iron Eagle can be anything from completing one side of a rubix cube, to solving memory puzzles," said Velie.

Sardinha added that on the CRI blog, there is a clue to one of the mystery challenges.

The race will span about four to five miles, with most of the distance being covered by bicycle.

Food and drink will be provided after the race by sponsors such as the Mellow Mushroom and Moe's Southwest Grill.

Awards will be given out after the Iron Eagle is completed along with a raffle that will be held at the RAC Amphitheater. Prizes will be donated from various sponsors of the Iron Eagle.

Volunteer positions are also available through Southern Adventures's Volunteer Coordinator for those who would like to help with the event.

Lily's serves up charm for breakfast and lunch

Restaurant Review

By JULIA WELCH

George-Anne staff

A dessert display case that looks like it popped out the 1960s is the first thing you see when entering Lily's Café.

The second is the bloody pumpkin-headed chef that temporarily guards the door.

Lily's Café is on East Main Street in downtown Statesboro, across from the Averitt Center for the Arts.

It's a longer restaurant than expected. The back hall leads to a bar area that would fix up nicely, but for now sits unused.

The open kitchen takes up half of the front area but let's you see into the fresh chef area where the owner prepares all the sandwiches, pancakes and cheesecake.

Pictures of his family decorate the walls and show patrons where the titles of many menu items came from.

The "lil j-stack" which is a short stack of 2 pancakes, an egg, and sausage named for his grandson.

The "Hen Pecked" sandwich was on special and came with fries for $7.95.

The sandwich is a grilled chicken breast topped with bacon, fresh veggies, and cheese.

I got the "Chick Philly" and was satisfied when strings of melty cheese came pulling out with my first bite.

The cut up chicken pieces were seasoned and grilled. The red and green bell peppers were sautéed with sweet onions.

A side dish of house made pasta salad with a very tasty dressing on it and fresh red onions and peppers mixed in.

The noodles were a bit past al dente, but the cute ramekin it came in still made me happy.

Other sides included french fries, potato chips and potato salad.

Chicken and tuna salad come on the salad menu that also has Caesar and Greek style options.

All the veggies are fresh daily. I could taste the bell peppers that made my hot sandwich a little sweet.

Although they are only open for dinner Thursday and Friday nights, I think this restaurant might benefit from a few late night meal options and a bar menu to go with the open patio area in back.

With the potential for growth and a few little kinks that will work out with time, Lily's café is only half way to being five stars and gets another half star for being so unique.

Eclectic art and family photos decorate the walls of Lily's Café in downtown Statesboro.

The Buzz List

■ Twilight's lead guy, Robert Pattinson just decided to take up a musical career singing. Actors that can't act seem to become singers that can't sing. Is the next step "Dancing with the Stars"?

■ Speaking of "Dancing with the Stars," Chaz Bono, Cher's son, just got voted off the show. Now there's no reason to watch. He's the reason most people tuned in. Nancy Grace and Ricki Lake are going to have to step it up on the gossip level to keep people watching.

■ Adele's "21" album just reached its thirteenth week at No.1 on the Billboard Hot 100. It just goes to show that people still like an artist that can actually sing, even if they aren't half-naked.

DJ Gare Bear brings an avant-garde style to 91.9 the Buzz

By DUSTIN TILLIGKEIT

George-Anne contributor

Diversity is a part of Georgia Southern University and this is no different for 91.9 the Buzz, the student run radio station on campus.

One of the DJs at the Buzz aspires to bring uniqueness and creativity to the station.

Gary Barton, junior multimedia communication major, better known as "DJ Gare Bear," hosts a radio show on the Buzz on Thursday afternoons from 4-5 p.m. and Friday afternoons from 1-3 p.m. Barton said that his show is "about being ambitious, avant-garde and creative."

Barton plays mostly 90s music from the genres of hip-hop and rock, specifically grunge, pop, R&B, jazz, alternative, and trip-hop.

Barton said, "Ever since I was little I've been listening to and collecting music and I'm glad it paid off."

Barton also said that his show features friends and acquaintances discussing current events and how they compare to events from the past. He said, "I go nostalgic on my audience."

Akeem Hill/ STAFF

Gary Barton, junior multimedia communications major, hosts a talk show as DJ Gare Bear on 91.9 the Buzz, Georgia Southern University's radio station.

Barton defined his mission as spreading the word that there is a radio station on campus.

His show started after he saw an ad at the radio station calling for people who wanted to work with the Buzz.

He was inspired to put in an application because of a speech impairment diagnosis from his childhood. Barton took speech classes and he said that this largely influenced him to use speaking on the radio as a tool to better himself.

When he first heard that he would be working for the radio, Barton didn't know that he would have his own show. At first he was nervous and had to use a script but after three episodes, Barton had no trouble developing his style into the radio show that he has today.

Barton said that his goal is to make everyone comfortable and to make sure that everyone gets a chance to be heard.

He said, "I really want radio stations to express themselves freely, artistically and vocally."

He enjoys interviewing and he even hinted that there would be a very important guest for his Nov. 4th show. It is meant to be a big surprise.

He was confident that his show will be better in this current season after his debut season last spring thanks to learning from mistakes.

"I love my audience," he said. "You never know what is going to happen."

He was surprised when he was first told how many people listened to his show and hopes to inspire other students to take the risk.

'Vampirates of Penzance' combines horror with humor

By WILDA THRIFT

George-Anne contributor

The opera "Vampirates of Penzance" will bring a more modern and relatable version of a famous opera to Georgia Southern University tonight.

"Vampirates of Penzance" is a parody of the Gilbert and Sullivan pirate opera set in 2011 with a Halloween twist for the spirit of the season.

The opera will be performed at the Performing Arts Center today through Saturday, Oct. 29 at 7:30 p.m.

Jillian Pashke, graduate assistant with the vocal department and a vocal performance major said, "It's a good opera for people who have never seen opera before. It's in English, and there's super-titles in English so if you can't understand what we're saying you can read it."

The super-titles will be displayed above the stage.

With all the hard work that has gone into making this play appealing for a modern audience, Pashke hopes that it will bring in a wide audience.

Pashke said, "I think the people in Statesboro and the school don't know about the opera, but it really is great and there's so many good students. I hope everyone can see it and learn more about opera from it."

The play has been modified to fit more in line with Halloween.

Pashke said, "We took the original Gilbert and Sullivan opera

Jessica Stanfield/ STAFF

Left: Brian Strickland, a senior vocal performance major, acts as a contemporary character to give the play a more relatable and modern style that students can relate to.

and put a little Halloween twist on it. All the pirates are vampires. So you'll be able to see their fangs and everything. And we set it in 2011 instead of when it was written in the 1800s. So there'll be some scary moments."

The changes to the play were made by its director so it is an experience unique to GSU.

Pashke said, "It's completely original. Our director, Erica Gregory, she completely rewrote some of the dialogue and words for the songs to that it could be about vampires, not just regular pirates."

While the theme uses elements from horror films, there are also aspects of comedy.

The actors have embraced the idea of existing in a horrific plot while presenting comedy to the audience.

Brittany Luberta, a junior with a double major in music and anthropology, said, "I love the performing side, and also the comedy. As an actress you take your character seriously but at the same time you try to ham it up as much as possible."

Luberta said, "For two hours, you get to look and act ridiculous, like how you'd never act in real life."

Further, the opera will explore a sense of surreal unusualness by warping the timeline between when it was originally written and when Gregory rewrote the play to accommodate modern audiences.

Brian Strickland, a senior with a double major in vocal performance and music education said, "The show's going to be funny; it's got plenty of recent jokes, plenty of old timey jokes, there's something in there for everybody to enjoy. So everyone should come out and help support it."

"Vampirates of Penzance" will be at the PAC tonight, Friday and Saturday at 7:30.

Scare on the Square thrills

By GIANNA CARME and TANQUA RUSS

George-Anne contributor

The dead will dance the "Thriller" downtown this Saturday at Statesboro's annual Scare on the Square.

Assistant professor Brent Wolfe and students from his Leadership Programming in Leisure Services class are assisting the Statesboro Development Authority with the planning and execution of the event.

Scare on the Square will feature a haunted house, a costume contest, vendors from local businesses and many activities for youth and young adults.

The students are working with the event for a service-learning project required for the course.

They are responsible for designing a hayride and various other activities for children.

The students are also creating a haunted house for adults. All of the activities at the event are free of charge.

Wolfe and his students were aided financially in the production of the event.

"We received a grant from the Office of Leadership and Civic Engagement which allows us to put on this event," said Wolfe.

Wolfe also said that his students have been putting a great amount of time and effort into Scare on the Square.

"It will be a great time for students. It is going to be college students scaring other college students," said Wolfe.

Scare on the Square will conclude with the crowd anticipated "Thriller" parade.

The parade starts in a flash mob style and dancers move down the streets of the square.

Participants have been practicing for the performance since the beginning of October.

"One year we were asked to do Thriller and it got such a rave review that the next year they decided to bring it back," said Jessica Gibbs, education graduate student.

Participants dress in full costume on the night of the performance.

"They've [the performance] had dead ballerinas and dead dentists. I remember seeing zombies in general," said Gibbs.

Scare on the Square will take place this upcoming Saturday, Oct. 29 at 5:30 p.m. in downtown Statesboro. The "Thriller" parade will begin at 9 p.m. to conclude the night.

Georgia Southern to take on rival Mountaineers in key game

Football

By JAMES FARMER

George-Anne staff

Appalachian State University versus Georgia Southern University is a rivalry that is one of the best in the Football Championship Subdivision.

The only two schools in Southern Conference history with six straight championship seasons will go head to head on Saturday in Boone, North Carolina. App. State comes into the game with a 5-2 record, including 3-1 in the conference. All-SoCon senior quarterback DeAndre Pressley was recently removed as starting quarterback, and was replaced by Jamal Jackson.

Special Teams: Georgia Southern has blocked three kicks in the last two games as well as recovering a bad punt snap in the end zone for a touchdown last week.

The Eagles missed their first field goal of the season last week, when Billy Greer could not connect on a 44-yard attempt. However, starting kicker Adrian Mora has yet to miss a field goal or extra point this season.

App. State has an average special teams unit, besides its field goal kicking game. The Mountaineers are around the middle of the conference in all areas except field goals, where they are dead last, hitting only three of their eight attempts.

Stat to watch: 3-4. Sam Martin, the Mountaineer place kicker is 3-4 from beyond 40 yards, but 0-4 on tries less than thirty yards.

Jevon Mention (54) blocks a field goal versus Presbyterian College last Saturday at Paulson Stadium during a 48-14 victory for the Eagles. The Eagles will take on the App. State Mountaineers in Boone, North Carolina Saturday.

Akeem Hill/STAFF

Advantage: GSU

App. State offense versus GSU defense: The Mountaineers have posted totals of 552 and 519 total yards after making their quarterback change. In only two starts Jackson has exceeded Pressley's passing touchdown total of the year and is only 102 yards shy of his total yardage.

The Mountaineers bring star receiver Brian Quick who has recorded 231 yards and two touchdown receptions since the quarterback change to the matchup. App. State is, averaging 199.3 rushing yards per game and 201.6 passing yards per game.

The Eagles will try to counter the explosive Mountaineer offense by shutting down Quick with Laron Scott. Brent Russell and the GSU defensive line will try to overwhelm the App. State offensive line, but will be in for a challenge against the Mountaineers' linemen.

Stat to watch: 287. App. State running back Travaris Cadet has rushed for 287 yards in his last two games after rushing for 213 in his previous five games.

Advantage: Even

GSU offense versus App. State: The Eagles have put up over 500 yards of offensive four times in seven games this year.

The Eagles' passing game is an explosive facet to the ground-based triple option. GSU averages over 19 yards a reception and has caught five touchdowns.

App. State's defense has been a little weak against the run so far this year, giving up over 177 yards per game on the ground. The defense is advantageous, scoring three touchdowns off of turnovers this season.

Stat to watch: 6. GSU has started six backs (quarterbacks, B-backs, A-backs) this season, also the number of backfield starters who have scored a touchdown this season.

Advantage: GSU

Final Analysis: App. State has been playing lights out since they made their quarterback change. If Jackson plays at the level that he has been playing, then the GSU defense will have its hands full trying to contain an offensive juggernaut.

GSU has been rolling and building up momentum all season. The defense gives up the fewest points in the conference and the offense scores the most points. However, the Mountaineers are the best team that GSU has faced thus far.

The crowd at Kidd Brewer Stadium is consistently one of the best in the SoCon and this weekend will be no exception. The Mountaineers and their fans will be looking for revenge after GSU broke their 27-game conference winning streak last year in overtime.

Stat to watch: 13-12-1. The Eagles trail the Mountaineers by one game in the all-time series record. They are the only current team in the SoCon that the Eagles do not hold a winning record against.

Final Score: 38-35 GSU
