Interest rates double
Congress fails to negotiate, students pay

BY LAUREN GORLA
The George-Anne staff

The United States Senate has again failed to make a decision about rising student loan interest rates, voting yesterday against a Democratic proposal to freeze the 3.4 percent interest rate for another year.

The current 3.4 percent interest rate on subsidized Stafford loans has doubled to 6.8 percent for the next school year but can change if Congress pursues further discussion of a solution.

“We ask (students) to work harder, and now we ask them to pay more,” Tom Udall, Democratic Senator for New Mexico, said during a Senate session Wednesday.

This same problem occurred last summer when Congress voted to keep the 3.4 percent interest rate for the 2012-2013 school year.

“The deadline for the Senate decision was July 1, but the Senate was in recess at the time and failed to make the decision.

“If (students) take out a new loan for this coming fall and forward, they’re looking at probably paying 20 dollars more per month in loan payments once they graduate and leave school,” Murphey said.

Based on research completed by The White House, over 200,000 Georgia students borrowed Stafford Loans for a total amount of more than $800 million.

“We have at least 65 to 70 percent of our students who have some type of loan,” Murphey said. “There’s a high percentage of students who do borrow money from the federal government.”

The last time the interest rate was 6.8 percent was in 2007. That same year, the College Cost Reduction and Access Act was passed to decrease the interest rate to 3.4 percent, which was eventually reached last year.

The College Cost Reduction and Access Act also specified that interest rates be reset on July 1 for the following school year, leading to the dilemma occurring now in Congress.

Students are encouraged to use the hashtag “Don’t Double My Rate” on Twitter to express the desire to keep the interest rates low, Murphey said.

“They can also contact their local representatives, their congressmen, their senator and voice their opinion that way,” Murphey said. “Let them know that this is not what they want to have happen.”

New Director of Football Operations is homegrown

BY SHAKEEM HOLLOWAY

Yesterday, head football coach Jeff Monken announced Kassi Lee as the new Director of Football Operations, effective immediately.

“We are thrilled to have Kassi Lee join our staff on a full time basis as our Director of Football Operations,” Monken said in a news release. “Kassi is tremendously loyal to Georgia Southern, and I know that our program will benefit with her in this important role with our team.”

Lee, a native of Elberton, is a former team captain and four-year letter winner for the Georgia Southern University cross country and track program. Lee has spent the past two years with the Eagle Football program as a graduate assistant responsible for operations and recruiting.

Lee holds two degrees from Georgia Southern, earning her bachelor’s of business administration in 2011 and a master’s of business.
Student keeps head high after shark bite

BY MEGAN GEORGE
The George-Anne staff

A Georgia Southern University student was released from a Florida hospital on Monday, July 1 where she was being treated for a shark bite.

Colleen Malone, a sophomore early childhood education major, was visiting Jacksonville Beach on June 25 when she was bitten on the foot by a shark. Malone is not sure exactly what shark it was because she did not get a good look at it.

“Our best guess is a Bull Shark and I think it was maybe three feet long,” Malone said.

Malone has been contacted by sources to study exactly what shark bit her.

“These shark specialists from the University of Florida got ahold of me and they want to check and see what shark it was,” Malone said.

“It was low tide so we were probably 30 to 40 feet out,” Malone said. “I was at most four feet deep.”

When a fin popped up Malone began to swim away, she said. She felt the round nose of the shark but was not sure if she had been bitten.

“When it bit my foot it just felt like a tug, and while I was swimming away I thought it missed me,” Malone said. “I was kind of in shock.”

Malone swam to shore to get medical attention.

“When I got to shore and saw just how bad it was, it started hurting really bad,” Malone said. “I almost passed out.”

She was treated at Baptist Medical Center in Jacksonville, Fl. from June 27 to July 1.

“Because of all the bacteria in their saliva, I was at a very high risk for infection,” Malone said.

The bite was not devastating and Malone is in good condition after receiving medical treatment.

“I have a pretty okay attitude about it,” Malone said. “I know the possibilities of it happening again are extremely low now that it actually happened.”

Other students that visit Jacksonville Beach are hesitant to get back in the water.

“The memory of being preyed on by a shark would be too overwhelming for me to get back in the water,” Abigail Ormsby, sophomore public relations major, said.

“I think it would be easy to never get back in the ocean after a shark attack, but I think we as people grow and become stronger when we choose not to take the easy way out of things,” Perry McWilliams, sophomore middle grades education major, said. “It’s easy to let fear control us, and I would want to be known as someone who didn’t do the easy thing and who conquered his fear.”

“This will not stop Malone from getting in the ocean again, however. She said, “I probably won’t go very deep, but I will definitely get back in.”

Interior design student on her way to the top

BY TANNIS KUFNER
The George-Anne contributor

Georgia Southern University student Callie Harkness received recognition from the National Kitchen and Bath Association (NKBA) in a student design competition, according to a news release.

Harkness was named an honorable mention for creating a living space for someone with mobility issues.

The senior interior design major from Richmond Hill, traveled to New Orleans in April to accept her award.

“It was very exciting because when I entered the competition, I wasn’t expecting to win or place,” Harkness said in the news release. “Being picked was like the interior design judges saying ‘Hey, you are really good, and we like your work.’”

Harkness’ assignment started a year ago in her residential design studio class. Her task was to turn a man’s basement into a living space for his mother who has arthritis, uses a walker and might require a wheelchair.

“In my design, I added many windows to bring in natural light and created lots of places where she could grab as she moved around like the back of a couch or countertop,” Harkness said in the news release.

“She is meticulous in her detailing which the judges recognized, but her artistic abilities sold them on her design through skillful renderings,” Patricia Walton, assistant professor of interior design said.

The process was very exciting because this was her first experience working for an actual client and not just a fictional person in a class assignment. Harkness said in the news release.

Harkness credits the Interior Design program at GSU for developing the skills needed to win the NKBA award.

“I think the way our professors begin by introducing the basics of residential design and build on those ideas before getting into the more complex and technical issues and codes of hospitality, corporate and healthcare designs is a good way to do it,” Harkness said.

This summer, Harkness is an intern at Anne Hagerty Interiors in Savannah where she is learning more about residential design.

Harkness said, “I’d love to work in Savannah and create the designs to restore historic homes and furnish and decorate them.”

Our View

Buses should travel to other locations

The university bus system has provided students with a convenient and accessible way to get to campus, but it is hard to cater to the entire body with Georgia Southern University’s limited amount of buses. Even with the additions of the new fleet of buses, those students without transportation still have to rely on other means to get to campus.

Apartment complexes Copper Beech and The Grove at Statesboro have taken initiative and now provide their residents with a shuttle to the GSU campus. This will not only provide students with an alternative to buying a parking pass, but it will also lessen the number of students who rely on university transportation. This is an important step for an apartment complex, but both the university and apartment complexes should look to expand their routes and give students the opportunity to take a shuttle to Wal-Mart or the downtown Statesboro area.

Some students on campus do not have a car and have to rely on other means to get to off-campus sites. If the university bus system were to work with the apartment shuttle and the city to provide free transportation off-campus, not only would this lessen the amount of traffic in Statesboro, but it would also give students an affordable way to buy groceries or other necessities. The apartment complex shuttles are a great first step toward catering to the needs of students, and with the help of the university and the city, the public transportation options for students would only improve.

Summer weather in a nutshell...

It’s summer, and that means freshmen. It started, and continues, with incoming freshmen on Georgia Southern University’s campus for SOAR, but a slew of Eagle Incentive Program (EIP) students also arrived at the end of last month.

Upon their arrival, we ran two editorials giving EIP students advice to either focus on their make-it-or-break-it classes or put “living it up” at No. 1 on the priority list. These writers and I have received more feedback than expected in the form of tweets, comments on our website and letters to the editor.

Firstly, I'd like to thank everyone who sent emails or comments; input from the general public is greatly appreciated. The opinions section is the closest connection community members have to The George-Anne, and it gives them an opportunity to express any mixture of emotions on any topic through letters to the editor.

Firstly, I'd like to thank everyone who sent emails or comments; input from the general public is greatly appreciated. The opinions section is the closest connection community members have to The George-Anne, and it gives them an opportunity to express any mixture of emotions on any topic through letters to the editor.

This recent dialogue about EIP could serve as a way to spread a better understanding of the program, which accepts students who have the high school GPA, but do not have the standardized test scores. This says more about standardized testing than it says about the students, but that’s another topic for another day.

The decision to publish the EIP columns was carefully considered, and my hope was to create a discussion concerning Georgia Southern’s newest students while including those students in the discussion.

Ignoring a problem will not make it go away, and people are going to disagree, especially with such a diverse population in such a small town. As always, The George-Anne welcomes comments and letters and appreciates all readership.

Farmer is a senior journalism major from Cordelle. She is the Editor in Chief.
This letter is in response to the opinion pieces, “EIP, don't ruin your chances” and “Don't sweat it EIP students, this semester is easier than it seems.” I understand every writer is entitled to his or her opinion, however, I believe that these two pieces are not in line with our Georgia Southern V.A.L.U.E.S. I feel compelled to correct some misinformation provided through the articles named above.

First, the articles seem to suggest that the Eagle Incentive Program is a remedial program. On the contrary, the Eagle Incentive Program offers a challenging curriculum to incoming students who have the grade point averages, leadership experience, and work ethic it takes to be a successful Georgia Southern student. Faculty members are hand selected to challenge and support these students as they transition into Georgia Southern University. The courses offered are of the same academic rigor as the courses offered to students admitted on a non-provisional basis.

Next, the article by Jackie Gutknecht claims that Georgia Southern University is “one of the biggest party schools in the state.” Considering statistics gathered from our annual crime statistics report, (http://welcome.georgiasouthern.edu/publicsafety/pdf/Annual_Security_and_FireSafety_Report.pdf), less than one percent of Georgia Southern students are arrested for alcohol violations annually and less than two percent are referred to the Office of Student Conduct for similar violations. The statistics do not support Ms. Gutknecht’s claim.

Ms. Martin suggested that EIP students should “live it up when you aren’t taking classes that actually matter.” These courses matter more than others, as they will determine if EIP students will be granted full admission to the university. She further encouraged irresponsible decisions by telling EIP students to “raise a glass and get crazy off of one drink.”

The majority of students admitted to the EIP program are between the ages of 17 and 18. I am disappointed that a student leader would encourage underage students to break the law and the rules of the Student Conduct Code. EIP students have been removed from the program due to misconduct, which eliminates their chances of being admitted to Georgia Southern University in the fall. The consequences of irresponsible behavior are too critical to take such a gamble.

According to our Georgia Southern V.A.L.U.E.S., “everyone has the right to be heard, and every word must be spoken with respect.” These articles were not an accurate representation of our community. Yes, people are talking, however, I would hope our goal in Student Media is to produce reputable journalism as opposed to a standard likened to that of a tabloid. It is inconsiderate to jeopardize the reputation of this great university for the sole purpose of attracting readers. There was nothing meaningful gained in sharing these opinions with our community.

In conclusion, I challenge the staff of The George-Anne to consider all facts and think about potential consequences of their work at all times. Who is affected? What are the effects? Is it worth it? Opinion pieces from student leaders carry weight and have influence in our community.

Also, I challenge students participating in the Eagle Incentive Program to give your very best in class and to make responsible decisions this summer. I look forward to having all of you back in August!

Patrice Buckner Jackson is the Dean of Students at Georgia Southern University.

Opinions

Zimmerman trial should not be showcased

Over the past two weeks we've been keeping a close eye on the George Zimmerman trial that's taking place in Florida. It's been one of the most highlighted trials to take place in recent years, though it's my speculation that it's the work of activists and the media that has made this case different than others similar to it.

In all the courts across America there are dozens upon dozens of self-defense trials, where a jury wouldn't even be called in to handle the situation. So what makes this case different? It's as simple as black and white. African American activists such as Al Sharpton, stepped in weeks after the incident occurred accusing Zimmerman of a hate crime thus launching this trial onto a national stage rather than your textbook self-defense case.

National news networks have been covering this trial almost non-stop since the first appearances in the courtroom. Certain networks have even had almost eight hours worth of airtime dedicated to it. Now with everything that is currently going on within the United States, and even the world, is it really necessary to have almost eight hours of coverage for the George Zimmerman trial?

Our National Security Agency still hasn't been able to track down the leader Edward Snowden. There is a huge abortion bill currently being debated in Texas. Illinois has just become the last state to allow a concealed weapon permits. Across the world we have an Egyptian president that has been removed from power by the military in one of the largest protests of leadership in Egypt's history. Don't get me wrong, it's a tragedy that a young boy has been killed, and it should be covered to a certain extent. Though in 50 years when we look back in history, what is more important? It should be obvious that a national security leader or an Egyptian military coup is of far more importance than a self-defense trial. These are events that can shape the future of how their nations operate.

For over a year now people have been talking about how either Martin was ruthlessly murdered by a racist Zimmerman, or the Good Samaritan neighborhood watchman Zimmerman was forced to kill an attacker in self-defense. Because it's become so politicized, it's become a subject that society has gotten emotionally involved in either for one side or the other. The media networks feed off of the emotions of the viewers and keep throwing more of it at them. It's okay to follow the trial and see how it pans out, but just remember that there are bigger things going on in the world than the politics of George Zimmerman and Trayvon Martin.

The Sports Page to replace Dos Primos

BY ASHLEY CRAVEY
The George-Anne staff

Sports fans will have more to choose from when deciding where to watch the big game with the opening of The Sports Page at the end of the month.

The sports bar is located across from Paulson Stadium and replaces Dos Primos on Lanier Drive. The menu will feature seafood, hamburgers, hotdogs and other entrees.

“We are thinking of doing all-you-can-eat crab legs from 7 - 9 p.m.” Grant Deloach, landlord and manager of The Sports Page, said.

“We will for sure have happy hour everyday from 5 - 7 p.m.”

The bar will have live entertainment on weekends and DIRECTV to show various sports programs, such as NFL Sunday Ticket.

“I think The Sports Page will be good competition for GATA’s and Retrievers. Being right next to the stadium should generate a lot of business on game days,” Alan Budd, senior mathematics major, said.

“I think we will do pretty well for game days,” Scott Martin, owner of The Sports Page, said.

Unlike University Plaza, which is composed of mostly bars and caters mainly to college students, The Sports Page will be a restaurant that will accommodate college students and local patrons.

“We’re trying to do a pub-style atmosphere, not just a late night bar scene,” Martin said.

The Sports Page will have small live bands play Friday, Saturday and Sunday nights, Martin said.

“It definitely offers something different than the plaza,” Ryan Hughes, manager of The Sports Page said.

According to The Sports Page’s Twitter account, a cover fee will not be charged.

“We are hiring many new people who attend Georgia Southern,” Deloach said. “We think it’s something they will like.”

The Sports Page will be accepting walk-in applications Mondays through Fridays and will hire servers, bartenders, bouncers and cooks.

More information on applying can be found on The Sports Page’s Facebook page or Twitter account.

Students and Statesboro residents will be able to watch the big game at The Sports Page, a new bar and grill that will open at the end of the month.

Tournament to be held in honor of Cory Wilson

BY GABY BENNETT
The George-Anne contributor

The First Annual Cory Joseph Wilson Fireball 40 Memorial Tournament will be held at the L. Scott Stell Community Park in Savannah August 2 - 3.

Wilson was a Georgia Southern University student and member of the Kappa Alpha Order fraternity who passed away on Jan. 17 after collapsing unexpectedly in class.

One division in the baseball tournament will be a High School Division for players ages 15-18 (rising Sophomores through Seniors). It will be in a Round Robin format with a championship game and three games guaranteed. The cost will be $30 per player.

The second division will be a 14U Open 60/90 division (players must not have turned 15 before May 1, 2013), with a format of two Pool Play Games followed by single elimination with three games guaranteed. The 14U division cost will be $350 per team.

All proceeds from the tournament will go to the Cory Joseph Wilson Scholarship at GSU and provide automated external defibrillators (AEDs) for facilities in need.

Wilson’s parents, Kenny and Lisa Wilson of Savannah donated an AED to the College of Business Administration on May 8.

All players involved in the tournament will receive a Fireball 40 t-shirt.
Channel your inner cow for free Chick-fil-A meal

BY ALEXANDRA MCCRAY
The George-Anne staff

Tomorrow, Georgia Southern University’s Chick-fil-A, along with thousands of other Chick-fil-A’s around the country, will celebrate Cow Appreciation Day by giving away free meals to customers dressed in cow attire.

National Cow Appreciation Day is celebrated the second Friday in July every year at all Chick-fil-A locations in the U.S. The goal is for loyal CFA customers to show their appreciation for cows through choosing to eat chicken.

“Even if you’re just partially dressed, you’ll still get something for free. Mostly we want it to be an opportunity to come out and enjoy Chick-fil-A by having a good time. We’ll have a photographer there and the Chick-fil-A cow will be there throughout the day too,” said General Manager, Marc Galvin.

The day dedicated to appreciating cows was first officially recognized as a Chick-fil-A holiday on July 15, 2005, when all of CFAs nearly 2,000 locations participated.

Although GSU’s on-campus Chick-fil-A is No. 1 in the country for sales on college and university campuses and the busiest licensed location, in past years its Cow appreciation day enthusiasm has been relatively low.

“We’ve done it before, but we haven’t had as big a turnout as we hoped because faculty and students sometimes assume we’re not doing it or we’re not a ‘real’ Chick-fil-A. But this year we really wanted to change that by getting the word out,” Galvin said.

Even though almost half of the student population will be out of town for the summer, both employees and fellow students are hopeful that cow appreciation day will be a hit.

“They probably won’t get the turnout they would hope for since it’s summer, but there’s always those people that will think it’s fun to dress up and will do anything for a free sandwich,” Kathleen Brown, a senior communication studies major, said.

Thomas Hulme, a junior construction management major at GSU and Chick-fil-A employee said “I’ve actually gone and dressed up myself and I’ve seen people in my hometown go all out. But even if you don’t and you just wear some Chick-fil-A attire you’ll still get something free like a drink or fry.”

Groucho’s first deli in Georgia impresses

Food Review ★★★★★
BY LILLY MCCANN
The George-Anne staff

An alternative to a McAlister’s Deli spud or a Jimmy John’s hangover-curing sub, Groucho’s Deli is the kind of neighborhood deli Statesboro could get used to.

Native to South Carolina, Groucho’s Deli is known for its melted subs, homemade coleslaw and potato salad and a variety of dressings that are relatively inexpensive, with a complete meal totaling to less than $10.

The laid-back atmosphere brings in a classic New York vibe combined with that of a college town sandwich shop.

The walls are generously decorated in Eagle Pride, as the Brave’s game is playing on the flat screen above it.

The sandwiches are overflowing with meat and smothered in melted cheese, accompanied by a pickle and bag of chips. Oh, and these sandwiches are messy, expect to use a fork and knife to finish.

The Formula “45” sauce, a rich blend of spicy Russian and Thousand Island dressing, is a partner along side sandwiches such as the STP and Apollo Dipper and ensures no sandwich is disappointing. It works great on just about every sandwich available.

The STP Dipper comes with roast beef, turkey, bacon and Swiss cheese on a huge sub roll. It is served with the “45” sauce or a Danish Bleu sauce. Either way, the sandwich hits the nail on the head in terms of flavor and price, coming in at a low $6.79.

Quality ingredients are an essential characteristic to Groucho’s Deli, and Groucho’s portions are not shy by any standard. Freshly sliced meats are stuffed into fresh hoagie rolls, coined “Dipper” sandwiches.

Dippers aren’t the only options though. The menu accommodates any palette or diet with vegetarian options and low-fat alternatives. Lighter fares for a lunch like the pasta, green and feta salad, which is served as a large plate of fresh salad greens topped with veggie pasta and a healthy dose of feta cheese.

The service is efficient and friendly, and the staff blends into the environment. Nike shorts and Georgia Southern shirts make it hard to distinguish the guest from the staff.

Praise to the ’90s alternative playlist murmuring in the background, which is only briefly interrupted by an “Order up” from the kitchen. Cheers to Matchbox 20.

The deli is expected to serve beer although the date is not yet set, until then you can raise your sweet tea to Statesboro’s newest deli.

One of Groucho’s Deli’s signature sandwiches, the STP Dipper, comes with a healthy serving of roast beef, turkey, bacon and Swiss cheese.
Magna Carta... Holy Fail

Music review ★★★★★

Jay-Z is 43 years old. He owns clothing lines, his own record label and part of an NBA franchise. He hangs out with the president. His wife is one of the queens of pop.

Honesty, rapping feels like a side project for him at this point, as much of a business venture as it is artistic expression. “Magna Carta... Holy Grail” only enforces that feeling.

The initial release was worked out to be part of a deal with Samsung and a special app that contained the album. The fun part is that Jay-Z has seen fit to find a novel way to collect customers’ money, and then rap about how much money he has. Starving artists don’t write songs about fashion designer “Tom Ford.” Or songs called “Crown.”

Similarly, younger artists don’t write songs about fatherhood, like “JAY Z Blue.” Newer artists don’t create songs like album opener “Holy Grail,” which crams in an underwhelming Justin Timberlake appearance and a re-do of the chorus to “Smells Like Teen Spirit” – a song that was released the same year I was born.

Outside the more contemplative tracks – “JAY Z Blue,” “Heaven,” “Nickels And Dimes” – the 16-track album plays like the musical equivalent of an episode of “Criminals,” except he doesn’t even have a gaudy, overblown mansion to show us. He just has a really nice house with a lot of money in it.

The one thing keeping “Magna Carta...” from falling into boredom or mediocrity is the production from Timbaland and other helpers. Some of the beats – the bass-heavy “Picasso Baby” or the weirdly retro “Tom Ford” – keep things fresh, but it’s all vanilla next to the sheer lunacy of Kanye West’s “Yeezus.”

“Magna Carta... Holy Grail” is solid, well written, well rapped and well produced. It covers all bases, from smooth introspection to the party-friendly bounce of “BBC.” It’s just too hard to get excited about, and it’s impossible to relate to Jay-Z, inc. at this point.

Depp falls flat in ‘The Lone Ranger’

Film review ★★★★☆

BY ALEX LASALLE
The George-Anne staff

Tonto might say, Lone Ranger bad movie. Too long. Lack focus.

Well, that’s what the Tonto of the original “The Lone Ranger” series might say. Johnny Depp’s interpretation speaks in fuller, though still efficient, sentences. Heavy with sarcasm and derision toward “Stupid white man.”

This movie is as much about Tonto as it is the Lone Ranger himself, if not more so. Because of this, it’s all the more disappointing that Depp seems to forget he isn’t playing Jack Sparrow any more. He uses many the same half-drunk mannerisms, as well as the familiar running motion like his pants are full of sand – except it’s sand from a desert instead of a beach. It’s easy to see him thinking, “Me copy earlier character. Collect paycheck.”

Depp also takes up more screen time than Armie Hammer, who plays the titular Lone Ranger – a lawyer named John Reid – as a naïve, new-to-the-west buffoon. His iconic mask is half-explained with ambiguous reasoning. He also has a similar no killing rule except Batman had things under control, while even to the end, the Ranger still feels like he’s in over his head, wasting Hammer’s natural on-screen charisma.

There’s a plot involving riches, a railroad and revenge, but it’s unremarkable. It’s also weighed down by some mystic side plots including Tonto thinking the Lone Ranger to be a “spirit walker.” It all just weighs down the plot, smoothes the otherwise strong sense of humor and leads to a 149-minute running time. Movie too long. Getting bored.

Director Gore Verbinski does well with the scenery, capturing some shots of sweeping vistas that dwarf the characters riding through them. He also does wonders with the more action-centric scenes, complete with appropriate disregard for the laws of physics and a horse with a particular talent for getting on top of buildings when nobody is looking.

Those action scenes are the only real strong point of the film. Fun, entertaining, and it’s hard not to get roused up when the William Tell Overture – you’ll recognize it, trust me – starts playing during a dramatic locomotive scene.

But it isn’t enough to save a blasted, unremarkable flop. As Tonto would say, Movie not very good. Wasted money on ticket. Watch other movie instead.

Byington adds an eclectic ensemble

Men's Basketball

BY WILL CHENEY
The George-Anne staff

Georgia Southern University men's basketball head coach Mark Byington's 2013-2014 recruiting class spans the nation showing a mix of veteran experience and freshman talent.

Junior small forward Angel Matias, transferring from Mississippi Gulf Coast Community College, averaged 17.5 points per game and shot 51.4 percent from the floor for the Bulldogs in an injury-shortened sophomore season.

Matias played his high school ball at Arlington Country Day School, located in Jacksonville, Miss. and also competed as a member of the Puerto Rican 18-U national team in 2010. Matias has two seasons of eligibility left including the upcoming 2013-2014 season.

"I expect Angel to make a major impact for our team this year at the small forward position, and he gives perimeter player with good size," Byington said in a news release.

Freshman power forward Kyle Doyle was signed by Byington out of Buford High School in Atlanta. Doyle finished his senior season with the Region 7-AAA Player of the Year Award and AAA First Team All-State honors.

“We expect him to make a major impact with our team next year. Kyle can play both forward spots and has a lot of qualities that will benefit our team," Byington said in a news release.

Before transferring to Buford, Doyle played his first three years at T.W. Josey High School in Augusta. While at Josey, he was an All-Area selection by the Augusta Chronicle. Doyle also played on the Georgia Stars AAU team, which reached the AAU National Championships last season.

Torolf Thomas, a freshman point guard from Meridian High School in Meridian, Miss., averaged 16 points, five rebounds and five assists as a senior last season. The 6-foot-4-inch guard also landed a spot in the Mississippi/Alabama All-Star game.

"Torolf has great size for a combo guard," Byington said in a news release. "He is almost 6-4 and 190 pounds before stepping onto campus, so he will physically be ready to play right away."

Before transferring to Meridian for his senior year, Thomas played his first three years at Robert E. Lee and Jefferson Davis high schools in Montgomery, Ala. While in Montgomery, he was the No. 3 point guard prospect in the state of Alabama.

Curtis Diamond, a junior guard from Lithonia, is a transfer out of Tallahassee Community College. In his two years at TCC, he did not miss a single game. Diamond averaged 12.7 points per game as a sophomore and earned second team All-Panhandle Conference honors.

"Curtis brings needed experience and maturity to our team," Byington said in a news release. "He can play either guard position and is a great shooter."

Diamond has two years of eligibility remaining, including the 2013-2014 season.

Senior forward Trent Wiedeman, a transfer from the College of Charleston, rounds out Byington's 2013-2014 recruiting class.

Wiedeman, having to sit out the 2013-2014 season due to a horizontal transfer, will be able to suit up for his final season of eligibility in 2014-2015. An All-Southern Conference selection in 2011-2012 and All-SoCon Freshman selection the previous year, he brings a decorated career to Byington's squad.

"Having coached Trent, I know he will give us toughness, rebounding and a post player who can score on the block," Byington said in a news release.

After the transfer of guard Cleon Roberts to La Salle University in Philadelphia and the firing of head coach Charlton Young, Byington and his crop of talent will bring a new look to GSU men's basketball.
Georgia Southern University quarterback Jerick McKinnon (1) scrambles out of the pocket looking for an open receiver downfield. McKinnon rushed for 1,817 yards and 20 touchdowns in 2012.

Eagles earn preseason honors

Junior running back Dominique Swope and junior offensive lineman Garrett Frye have been selected as preseason All-Americans. Junior punter Luke Cherry and senior quarterback Jerick McKinnon were added to preseason award watch lists.

Swope and Frye have been selected to The Sports Network 2013 preseason All-Americans.

Swope is the first Eagle running back to rush for 1,000 yards in consecutive seasons since Jermaine Austin in the 2002-03 season. He was also one of four sophomores to appear in the 2012 NCAA Football Championship Subdivision top-25 rushing list and was named first team All-America by College Sports Journal.

Frye is not new to All-America honors. Last season, the offensive lineman earned third team All-America honors by The Sports Network and the Associated Press.

In 2012, he recorded 72 knockdowns and performed well against Elon University and Old Dominion University in the playoffs.

Cherry was added to the College Football Performance Awards watch list for the CFPA Punter Award.

Cherry ranks in the top 10 for GSU in career punts and career punting yards while also handling kickoff duties for the Eagles.

McKinnon was added to The Sports Network’s 2013 Walter Payton Award watch list.

The award takes its name after former Jackson State University, Chicago Bears and National Football League Hall of Fame running back Walter Payton and is presented annually to the top offensive player in the Football Championship Subdivision.

McKinnon’s 1,817 rushing yards in 2012 placed him third all time on GSU’s single-season rushing list behind Adrian Peterson with 1,932 yards in 1998 and Jayson Foster with 1,844 yards in 2007. Both Peterson and Foster were Walter Payton Award winners.

“McKinnon’s 1,817 rushing yards were truly a blessing, and I am honored that my name is on the list for the Walter Payton Award, but this wouldn’t be even be possible without my teammates,” McKinnon said in a news release. “All the credit for this nomination goes to them.”

Eyes around the nation will be focused on coach Jeff Monken’s squad in 2013, including senior defensive lineman Javon Mention, who was added to the CFPA watch list for defensive lineman back in June.

The Eagles’ season begins August 31 versus Savannah State University.
