EDITOR'S NOTE—This is the second installment of Chapter III of "The Story of Bulloch County" and is the sixth in the series which began on August 29. This week we write on how the people of early Bulloch County amused themselves and tell the story of a Christmas Festival of 1793 as written by Mr. Clyde Hollingsworth of Sylvania.

After the Revolution and the organization of our government the militia of the state was an important part of the national defense and careful attention was given to it up to the time of the War Between the States. The men were organized into companies, battalions, regiments, brigades and divisions officered by lieutenants, captains, majors, etc. Important posts in the militia were often stepping stones to political office. Many of the inventories of estates in Bulloch County carry the item "Militia Sword."

In the minutes of the Inferior Court of July, 1823, assignments for educational supervision are made in Captain Hagin's district, Captain Wise's district, Captain DeLoach's district, Captain Fagan's district, and Captain Lockhart's district. Our voting districts still carry two of these names, the Hagin district, and the Lockhart district.

Men amused themselves at the military muster, shooting matches and horse races. A favorite race track in Statesboro was what is now North Main Street. But for those who liked to see the horses run in circles there was the race track around the Race Pond located near the site of the Ogeechee School, just southwest of the Willie Zetterower home. The race track, which gave the pond its name, was exactly one mile around. Here many a horse race was held. Bulloch and Tattnall counties boasted of having some of the swiftest horses in the state and they contested many a derby not only at home but in Savannah and Augusta.

The area also served as a muster ground for the State Militia and here troops gathered for muster drill. Weddings in early Bulloch County were important social functions. Here is an account of a wedding in 1793, written by Clyde Hollingsworth which includes names of citizens of what three years later became Bulloch County.

A CHRISTMAS FESTIVAL OF 1793

"This is the story of the most exciting Christmas Party that was ever held in the pineclands of frontier Georgia. The characters are real and their names have not been changed. The main facts are historical, some details are fictional. The time is Christmas, 1793. The place is the commodious, two story, log dwelling of Benjamin Lanier, the region's most powerful political figure. It was located on the Louisville-Savannah road about midway between the two cities and near the rocky ford over the Ogeechee River.

This Is

The Story of Bulloch County

Making wedding plans

"The first plans, made mostly by the interested ladies, were for a party combining the festive spirits of Saint Nicholas and the elfin Cupid to honor a newly-elected bride and groom. Bird Lanier, the handsome and promising young son of Benjamin and Susannah Lanier, had won the heart and hand of the region's most beautiful belle, the vivacious and charming Elizabeth Dixon, the daughter of the deceased Robert Dixon, and his widow, Sukey Jones Dixon, who had at this time married Luke Mizell. The wedding was to be December 22, 1793. The party, to which the wedding couple would return from a short honeymoon spent with nearby kinsmen, was to be held on Christmas Eve.

"Even while Susannah Lanier and Sukey Mizell were planning for the Christmas-Wedding festival Benjamin Lanier was in Louisville, the State Capital, on an important mission. About a week before Christmas came the news that the General Assembly of Georgia had passed an Act, on December 14, creating a new county to be named "Screven" and including a large area between the Savannah and Canoochee rivers. An election was to be held on January 19, 1794, to elect the county officers. Added dignity and importance now attached to the Lanier home for it had been designated in the Act as the Capitol Building of the new county.

"That which was planned to be a joyous wedding party, honoring a popular bride and groom, would also become a social and business function of state. Romance would now share honors, not only with Saint Nicholas, but with that which was rapidly becoming the great American pastime—politics! Proud pioneers were eager to establish a new government in the pine barrens, and a culture founded upon the ideologies being rapidly moulded as the American way of life. "We must ask everybody!" exclaimed the determined and jubilant Benjamin Lanier to the demurring Susannah and Sukey, whose timidity was soon turned to enthusiasm when they had offers of help from the neighbors, and widows, Elizabeth Mills, Vera Hollingsworth, and Elizabeth Hucklebee Jones, and their female slaves. To the rear of the Lanier dwelling was an open court surrounded by the slave quarters. It was in this court that the men dug a barbecue pit, cleared a place for a bonfire, and had a large pile of oak and hickory wood placed to be used for the barbecue. There was a large pot hanging in the trivet. The dutch oven, and the large fireplaces were in the kitchen and the main part of the house.

A simple wedding

"The wedding was in simple dignity as customary with woods people. The vows were spoken before the groom's great uncle, Justice Lemuel Lanier, at the home of the bride's mother in the presence of a few relatives and friends. Sukey lived on the Louisville road a few miles southeast of the Ben Lanier residence. The lone exception to the simple homespun and hand woven garments of those present was the beautiful wedding dress of the bride. It had also been the wedding dress of the bride's mother, and of Elizabeth Hucklebee, her grandmother, when she was wedded to Francis Jones back in North Carolina. It was the family's sole possession and symbol of a social culture several generations removed from the hard and rugged pioneer life deep in the Georgia back woods.

"For the honeymoon the couple went by horseback to spend the night with relatives west of the Ogeechee River. They crossed the river at rocky ford where it was legendary for the girl, if she loved the boy, to feign fear of her horse stumbling so that the one she loved could take her in his arms, and step by step, from rock to rock carry her to the opposite bank. As they had done before, they crossed with Elizabeth held closely to the heart of Bird, and they, as many couples to follow, knew the thrill of crossing upon the rocks of the Ogeechee.

"Great preparations were made for the large crowd expected at the Lanier home which included many slaves and their children. Several acres, to the front and rear of the Lanier manor was cleaned of debris and swept with galberry brooms. Hogs, lambs, deer and wild turkey were butchered and made ready for the barbecue pit. The house was cleaned and decorated from front to back. The men brought holly, mistletoe and bamboo from the swamp for decoration. A row of stockings was hung from the long mantle in the living room for the Lanier grandchildren who would spend Christmas Eve in the Manor House.

Guests arrive at sundown

"By sundown all guests had arrived. The bride and groom were the center of attention for the admiring crowd and received many gifts and warm felicitations from everyone. The house was jammed with a crowd that overflowed to the kitchen and dining room outside of the main house, and to the bonfire in the court and around the barbecue pit where they enjoyed the savory fumes from the roasting meat. The guests included, besides those already mentioned, Luke Mizell, Anthony Bonnell, John and Winefred Bonnell, James and Elizabeth Jones, Francis and Polly Jones, Ben and Mary Womack, Joseph and Sarah Jackson, Clement and Sallie Lanier, Robert and Sarah Dixon Williams, Stephen and Jane Mills, Abraham Lane, Drury Jones, Abraham and Patience Mincey, William and Anne Blackman, Richard and Letitia Cooper, William Coursey, Michael Dixon, Thomas Hylton, Lewis Lanier, William Cooper, John and Sarah Lanier, Lemuel Lanier, and a score or more of the 'younger set,' besides many children.

Statesboro, Georgia, Thursday, October 3, 1957

"Following the sumptuous feed, the younger contingent, led by Bird and Elizabeth, gathered in the living room to dance. William Blackman and Abraham Mincey were the fiddlers. The white children and pickaninies played by the light of the bonfire. The men gathered around the fire, each bringing his seat, a block of wood from the wood pile, to make plans for the formation of government in a large section of Georgia.

"Ben Lanier led the discussion. He had already received from the Governor his commission as Chairman of the Justices of the Inferior Court. It was this court's duty to plan the election and handle the fiscal affairs of the county. The men proceeded with dignity and earnestness. None of them had much formal education. Theirs was the job to establish law and order in a large area far removed from the centers of government. Lawlessness, illiteracy, and immorality were factors against which they must plan. While there is no record of their thinking it must have been decided that the county officers should, for the most part, be men who lived near the home of Ben Lanier, which was the capital of the county. Probably no other Screven Countian has had so much responsibility as did Benjamin Lanier. The force of his power is attested by the results of the election on January 19 when Lewis Lanier was elected to the Senate, Clement Lanier, Ben's son, was elected to the house, William Coursey, a close neighbor, was elected sheriff, Thomas Hylton, a neighbor, was elected Clerk of Superior Court, Robert Williams, who married a sister of the bride, was elected Probate Judge, and Luke Mizell, Justice.

"In spite of the vicissitudes of the era these strong men, and their women, established in Georgia's forest a society, which preserved for us, in decency, the home as a sacred institution, government as a protection to liberty and justice, under a God that we can worship in complete mental freedom."

Major W. A. Bowen reports very good results from his fish pond on his farm in the West-side community. It was stocked properly about three years ago and he drained it two weeks ago. He says the broom were on one-half to one and one-half pounds in size and the trout from a pound to six pounds. He was very pleased with both his broom and bass which came from the U. S. Fish Hatchery at Milton. Now he is killing all small fish with rotenone and plans to restock correctly again.

According to Mrs. Betty Alexander, consumer information specialist, Agricultural Extension Service, Bartlett pears ripen faster than other varieties and are ready for eating as soon as the skin shows a golden color.

OUR SOIL • OUR STRENGTH • SOIL CONSERVATION SERVICE BY E. T. REDD • MULLIS

The U. S. Fish and Wildlife Service of the Department of the Interior has recently notified me that deliveries of bluegill bream to cooperators will be made some time in October. Those cooperators needing fish for stocking their ponds will have to get their applications in before delivery can be made to them. The U. S. Fish Hatchery is located near Millen, Georgia and will come from there to Statesboro.

To get your pond in shape for the new fish, it will pay to test and see if any wild fish are present. A minnow seine is good for this. If small fish are present, you should stop any flow of water from the pond and treat with 5 per cent rotenone or derris powder. After about ten days or two weeks it will be safe for stocking with the proper kind and number of broom.

Farm Bureau

Question of 'What is the Farm Bureau?' gets an answer

What is the Farm Bureau? That is a question in the minds of some people who are not too well acquainted with the Farm Bureau in Bulloch County. A recent issue of the Georgia Farm Bureau News gave this definition of the Farm Bureau: "The Farm Bureau is a free, independent, voluntary, non-profit, governmental organization of farmer families. Members derive some benefit from the organization whether or not they want to belong to the Farm Bureau. Its purpose is to provide a voice for agriculture in America."

More than 400 Bulloch County farmers renewed their membership in the Farm Bureau on September 25 when the local community chapters began their regular meetings for 1957, according to W. C. Hodges, president of the Bulloch County Farm Bureau. Plans are under way in each community to complete the membership drive toward the county goal of 1458 members for the coming year. Westside and Stillson Farm Bureau chapters held their regular meetings the past week with good attendance at each meeting. Plans for the 1957-58 school year were discussed, and a report of a committee from the West Side chapter informed the membership that a group of the work being done to improve the kitchen and dining room at there. This committee reported that the work of these rooms having been completed.
