REFLECTOR

Game Day Rituals

“Georgia Southern! “Whose House? Our House!” “Wings Up, Eagle Nation!” are some phrases just about every student at Georgia Southern University knows by heart. Game days at Southern are always filled with school spirit, gold, blue and white. It’s a time where everyone becomes best friends with other students around them for a few hours. There are so many events that happen on game day, and these rituals remind us why we are the best team in America.

1. Freedom’s Flight
2. “All I Do is Win”
3. Chanting with Gus
4. Game Day Entertainment
5. Fireworks and a canon after a touchdown
6. Singing Southern’s alma mater and “It Is Well” when the game is over

Eight things to distract you from studying for finals week

Call your mom
She misses you.

Take on the epic quest of eliminating all the bed bugs at Hendy with only a magnifying glass
God knows we need a true hero to step up and take out those pesky bed bugs in Hendy and who better than you? I have no clue how the magnifying trick works so let me know how that all works out. Godspeed!

Visit every bathroom on campus
Honestly, this is a bucket list item and why not knock it out when you should be studying? From Russell Union to the Nursing Building, hit up every bathroom and find your #1 spot to go to.

Hydrate
Everyone knows the key to a well-functioning mind is some quality H2O. Everyone also knows that the cure to an intense study session is a good cold beer. Take a break and crack that.

Go to the Math and Physics Building
If your experience has been anything like mine, it will take you at least 20 minutes to find your way back out of the Math and Physics building. All the doors start looking the same. Honestly, go ahead and give Math and Physics majors a degree for figuring out where that place is.

Argue with the bookstore with textbook buybacks
The semester’s over right? I mean maybe you need it for that last power hour study session but go ahead and knock out the disappoint feeling of selling your $150 slightly used textbook for $20. They might as well be Gamestop, amirite?

Wait for the perfect parking spot at Henderson Library
Any spot on that front row of the Hendy parking lot is solid gold. It’s so perfect that someone on the end will always try to make an extra spot by parking on the sidewalk. Honestly, if all the spots are taken, just take a lap. There’s no way in hell you’re going to settle for a second row spot. It messes with your gold. Read this article
Let’s be real. If you read this crappy article, you’re royally trying to kill some time. I know this because writing this crappy article helped me procrastinate studying. A little procrastinatology never killed anyone, but now that we’ve both gotten it out of our system, let’s give these finals hell! Good luck everyone!

It’s been one year, but the divisions need to go
It’s hosted by the top school, which is awesome for the fans. This joins the trend of the team with the top conference record having the privilege of being able to host the game. Also, having a championship game in general raises SBC’s prestige as far as a conference goes. It creates excitement and gives the two schools an extra game to prepare for.

But with any other decision in sports, the decision to have an SBC championship had its flaws. The biggest flaw being the layout of the East and West divisions. At first glance, it makes perfect sense. Teams that are west of Troy, Alabama are in the West division and teams that are east of Troy, Alabama are in the East division. So, yes, geographically, it seems like a good move.

In the light of talent and good football, however, it’s shameful. For the inaugural championship game, 9-2 Appalachian State that was ranked in the AP poll earlier this season, will be taking on 7-5 Louisiana that lost by 18 at home to a 5-7 Coastal Carolina, Riveting.

The Mountaineers are 163 point favorites Saturday against the Ragin’ Cajuns. This is the second championship for this season behind the ACC championship, where No. 2 Clemson is a 23.5 point favorite over 7-5 Pittsburgh. What should happen in the Sun Belt’s case is tear down the division barrier and have the top two records battle in the East division. They could still maintain rivalries like App State-Georgia Southern and Troy-South Alabama by having every team play every team in the conference.

“But divisions are so fun and place more importance against in-division opponents.”

This is the exact situation the Big 12 does currently and has done since their reinstatement of a championship game in 2017. Every big game still gains the attention it should, but at the end of the season you have the two best teams, No. 5 Oklahoma and No. 14 Texas, playing in arguably the most important game of the weekend.

If the championship game was in place this season, there’d be a rematch of App State and Troy, two nine-win teams that have gained attention nationally for years. A much more exciting game than what SBC fans “get” to experience in Boone Saturday.

Dean of Libraries Bede Mitchell has confirmed reports of bed bugs in Henderson Library but says treatment has been used to remove the bugs.

Mitchell confirmed the reports in an email Wednesday morning.

"Some bedbugs were reported, so we removed the furniture where the bugs were observed and Knox Pest Control came to treat the area," Mitchell said. "We are on the alert for other bugs, but none have been found so far."

According to an email from Georgia Southern University student Franchette O'Neal, library staff members removed a number of chairs from the second floor of the library after finding one infested with bed bugs.

"My friend, who sat on the chair, was instructed to go home and wash the clothes he was wearing twice and dry them in high heat," O'Neal said. "He also said that he actually found another bed bug on his backpack."

Mitchell said that this is the first time this semester reports of bed bugs in the library have been confirmed.

"There was a bedbug report a few weeks ago, but Knox found no bedbugs and the photos shared with us were clearly not bedbugs," he said. "We inspected the area several times and found no bugs of any kind. Don't know what they were, but there's no evidence of infestation."

Georgia Southern fraternities placed on interim suspension pending investigation

"In certain circumstances, the Associate Vice President/Dean of Students or designee, in consultation with the System Director for the University System of Georgia, may impose a University or Residence Hall suspension prior to a hearing."

During an interim suspension, students may be denied access to the Residence Halls and/or to the campus (including classes) and/or all academic activities or privileges for which the Student might otherwise be eligible, as the Student Conduct Officer may determine to be inappropriate. The Student will be responsible for working with Faculty Members to make-up any missed work (if possible).

An interim suspension should only occur where necessary to maintain safety and should be limited to those situations where the "risk" poses a serious and immediate danger or threat to persons or property. In making such an assessment, the University should consider the existence of a significant risk to the health or safety of the alleged victim or the campus community; the nature, duration, and severity of the risk; the probability of potential injury; and whether less restrictive means can be used to significantly mitigate the risk.

If an interim suspension is imposed, the notice and hearing should follow within ten (10) Days."

The Office of Fraternity and Sorority Life support the actions by both Presidents of Kappa Sigma and Delta Tau Delta were emailed for comment but have not replied.

The George-Anne has requested documents related to the investigation under the Freedom of Information Act and will update this article as more information becomes available.

Two Georgia Southern University fraternities located on Creek Row have been placed on interim suspension pending investigation.

Jennifer Wise, director of marketing and communications, confirmed that fraternities Kappa Sigma and Delta Tau Delta were placed on interim suspension, however, the cause for investigation was not made available.

"Georgia Southern University has placed the fraternities on interim suspension pending a full investigation," Wise said. "The safety of our students is our highest priority and we do not tolerate unsafe practices and behaviors that jeopardize our students' well-being."

Georgia Southern students airlifted to Savannah after being struck by car while riding Lime scooter

By Matthew Enfinger

Two Georgia Southern University students received multiple injuries after being struck by a car on Nov. 16 while crossing Fair Road on a Lime scooter.

According to a Georgia State Patrol police report, GS students Daniel Cooney and Taylor McCullough were believed to be traveling west on Catherian Avenue on a scooter.

Driver Christopher Cutter was traveling north in the left lane of Fair Road in a 2009 Chevy Impala LTZ when Cooney and McCullough failed to yield. According to police reports, at the time of the crash, Cutter was looking down, and after looking back up, noticed the scooter and its passengers crossing into his path.

According to police reports, Cutter could not avoid the collision and struck the scooter with the front of the vehicle. After the impact both Cooney and McCullough were ejected from the scooter with one or possibly both striking the windshield of the car.

Cutter traveled approximately 135 feet 5 inches before coming to a stop, according to police reports. The scooter’s passengers landed in the left northbound lane, approximately 23 feet 9 inches from the front of the vehicle. Cutter was not injured, however, both Cooney and McCullough were flown to a hospital in Savannah following the crash, Ginger Robins, Georgia State Patrol Officer, said.

According to a gofundme post, McCullough has undergone surgery to relieve pressure and blood from her brain. McCullough also suffered broken cheek bones, a broken pallet and a broken leg.

The current condition of Cooney is unknown. The George-Anne will update this article as information becomes available.

“Prayers and hopes are needed for her and her family,” the gofundme account reads. “If there is anything beyond this that you might be able to help out with monetarily, please help by donating to her gofundme page to help her family with her medical expenses.”

Donations to McCullough can be made at https://www.gofundme.com/angels-for-taylor. McCullough’s goal is currently set at $50,000.

Friendship Baptist Chatt Hills Church continues to post updates on McCullough’s condition on its Facebook page. According to a post made on Nov. 20, McCullough was able to speak on the phone and no longer requires a breathing tube.

“The first thing she said was to tell the church how thankful she is and she knows that she is only here because of your prayers,” Friendship Baptist Chatt Hills Church’s post reads. “Thank you so much and please continue to pray for her as she goes through her reconstructive surgeries.”

GS students Daniel Cooney and Taylor McCullough (above) received multiple injuries after being struck by a car while the two shared a Lime scooter.
HIV TESTING
HEALTH SERVICES
NOVEMBER 29 | 11 AM - 4 PM | RUSSELL UNION COMMONS
1 in 8 people infected with HIV don’t know they have it. CDC recommends that everyone between the ages of 13 and 64 be tested for HIV at least once as part of routine health care. A general rule for those with risk factors is to get tested annually. Get tested for free at the following clinics sponsored by Health Services, the Department of Public Health and the Gay Straight Alliance (GSA).

BOULDERING NIGHT OUT
CAMPUS RECREATION AND INTRAMURALS
NOV. 16 | 7 - 8:30 PM | SHOOTING SPORTS EDUCATION CENTER
Bouldering Night Out (BNO) is a monthly event that Southern Adventures hosts at our bouldering cave the last Thursday of each month during the semester. Each BNO has a different theme and we strongly encourage individuals to dress to the theme (we usually have a best-dressed prize)! This event is open to all ranges of experience, whether you are an experienced climber or a first timer this event is fun for everyone. Prizes are raffled and food is served at each BNO, but you must be participating in the event to get the goods. No sign up is needed for BNO, just show up at 7:00 the last Thursday each month for a great time at the bouldering cave.

Chapter of the Year
Zeta Tau Alpha
This year will mark the highest number of reported cases of sexual assaults at Georgia Southern University and in Statesboro in the past few years. Despite this, there could be even more because it is one of the most underreported crimes, according to the National Sexual Violence Resource Center.

This year, through incident reports obtained through several FOIA requests to GS’ Office of Public Safety, Title IX Office, and Statesboro Police Department, there were a total of 31 cases of sexual assault, six cases of rape and two cases of sexual battery in 2018. The number of reported cases of rape were at the lowest with a total of six in 2018. The highest was in 2016 with 16. This is not to say that these numbers are truly representative of all sexual assaults and rapes that occur on campus, but rather ones that have been reported to the Title IX Office, the Statesboro Police Department and the Office of Public Safety. These numbers do not include the Teal House: Sexual Assault and Child Advocacy Center’s numbers. This non-profit organization offers services and programs to Bulloch County and its surrounding counties, such as free forensic examinations, counseling sessions, support group sessions and a 24-hour crisis hotline. These reports included various areas because some do not even report to law enforcement at all. This is because some will go through other places, such as the Teal House or the Title IX Office instead because it is not such an invasive process. However, some will not report at all. According to the Rape, Abuse & Incest National Network, three out of four sexual assaults are never reported.

Jodi Caldwell, who is also the director of the GS counseling center and is also a chair on the Sexual Assault Response Team, or SART, explains that many victims do not report for several different reasons.

“So, a lot of victims will choose not to report for one, yeah, it’s embarrassing,” Caldwell said. “It’s re-traumatizing. Victims often face repercussions from people they know.”

In fact, most sexually violent acts are actually committed by someone that the victim knows. Although reports were not provided from the Teal House, Caldwell, states that the number of reported sexual assaults is increasing. Out of every 1,000 cases tried, approximately 995 offenders walk free of their crimes, according to RAINN. Not only that, but out of these 1,000 cases, nine of them will be referred to a prosecutor and only five of them will probably lead to a felony conviction.

This, however, does not mean that people should not stop reporting rapes or sexual assaults that occur, because rape cases can be difficult to prosecute for several different reasons. Some reasons can include that the forensic evidence was lacking, the victim could not remember everything, he or she was intoxicated or could also be in a consensual relationship with the defendant.

Also, with the forensic evidence, there has to be proof of whether or not there was consent, too, and sometimes, that can be difficult, too.

Out of all the cases gathered from the SPD, the Title IX Office and the Office of Public Safety, there was only one case of false imprisonment. According to the NSVRC’s website, cases of false imprisonment are actually very low—typically between two and 10 percent.

Out of those 1,000 cases of rape, 46 of those actually lead to an arrest of the offender, and only 230 out of 1,000 of those cases are actually reported to the police.

“Many victims know their offenders,” Caldwell said. “They don’t present like a sexual assailant. They’re already in the victim’s world circle, and that’s how the assailant gains access to them,” Caldwell said.

Despite this, many people and organizations are trying to get the conversation started to better inform people of this issue.

Rachel Pinkerton, a junior public health major, said: “I think we should talk more about it, then people would know more about it because it happens a lot.”
When I walked into the lobby of The Ted Smith Family Center at Paulson Stadium, one thought stood out over all the others: This is a school that’s proud of its football. The Ted Smith Family Center is home to football head coach Chad Lunsford’s office. Straight in front of whoever walks inside the building is a wall made of windows, as if it is framing the “prettiest little stadium in America.” GATA is in big letters above the wall of glass. It’s a beautiful day in Paulson. The sun is shining, illuminating the football field. One person runs from endzone to endzone on the field below me. As always, it’s a good day to be an Eagle.

The team’s national championship title plaques are proudly displayed in the lobby. Part of a wall is showcasing the Bill W. Nelson Hall of Fame. As I waited to interview Coach Lunsford, I sat on a blue couch in front of trophy cases holding Southern’s GoDaddy Bowl trophy from 2015 and the Sunbelt Conference Championship trophy from 2014.

Lunsford has held an array of positions, including jobs at Georgia Military College, Appalachian State, Griffin High School, Auburn and Georgia Southern University. He has always gravitated towards football growing up. He played the sport in little league, middle school and high school. While he claims he wasn’t very good at it, he loved and enjoyed football. His biggest influences were his high school coach and all the coaches he’s worked with throughout his career.

“I just try to take everybody as far as how they handled things, how they did things, and just try to learn the situation they were in,” Lunsford said.

Lunsford thought he wanted to coach, but he didn’t make up his mind until he was in college.

“When I jumped into it, I knew that’s what I was meant to be,” Lunsford said.

I asked Lunsford what obstacles he’s had to overcome to achieve success at Southern today. Lunsford said it was going through the hard times and not losing faith or sight of what GS is.

“Georgia Southern is a very proud and successful program, and when it’s down, there’s a lot of negativity, and I think being able to overcome that - not just me, but our whole football team and our whole staff, and just being able to create a positive environment, was the biggest obstacle,” Lunsford said.

At the time of the interview, GS was in contention for the Sunbelt Championship. I asked Lunsford, from the perspective of coaching, how did he go from a losing season last year to a bowl-eligible team in contention for the Sunbelt Championship. Lunsford said that is starts with culture. He said they’ve always had a strong brotherhood with their players - it’s a close, tight-knit group. Lunsford thought it was important in the off-season to build a positive environment. He said they are still held accountable but with a positive spin on everything.

“You got to get the kids to know you care about them and love them. And love equals time, so you got to spend time at it. And I think it was very important because our guys spend time together, our coaches then spend time with them, and it just became a big bond,” Lunsford said.

I asked Lunsford to describe his relationship with the players. He said he’s a player’s coach.
LUNSFORD continued

His positivity has an effect on all of those around him.

Kindle Vildor, a junior sports management major, is a cornerback for the GS football team.

“He’s never went away from that word,” Werts said.

Vildor described Lunsford as a play coach, saying he gets along with every single player and has a relationship with each and every one.

“I feel like a lot of coaches, they probably want to just make it strictly about football, win or lose, but I really want to win, I want to win. But he cares about more than that. He cares about how our family is doing, how we’re doing and, if we need anything, be sure to go to him for it,” Vildor said.

Lunsford and defensive coordinator and safeties Scot Sloan have coached together for nine years at three different previous places: Griffin High School, Georgia Military College and GS.

“In this business, you don’t get a lot of opportunities to work with someone that you’re that close to. During the course of your career, any time you get a chance to cross paths again with somebody you’re good friends with, it’s kind of hard to turn down,” Sloan said.

I asked Sloan how it is working with Coach Lunsford.

He said they have a good working relationship, and he thinks the fact that they know and trust each other as much as they do helps. He said they have open communication in both directions and they sometimes use each other as sounding boards. Sloan explained they keep it professional even though they are close.

“The fact that we’ve got such a good trust and good relationship, lined back and forth, I think helps it be a good working relationship as well,” Sloan said.

I asked Sloan what the players mean to him. He said they mean everything.

Being able to mentor young guys as they’re in a huge transitional stage in their life and being able to give the opportunity to build and equip them for the real world is important to him.

Each guy has a different thing, I think, in their life that needs [to be] touched on, and so I think as a coach, if you can identify that and touch on it, then really you’ve done your job as far as the position of being a coach,” Sloan said.

Sloan has no doubt Lunsford shares this same philosophy. If he didn’t, Sloan wouldn’t have come back to GS.

“Football is way bigger than just X and O’s and the schemes that you put together, the plays and things of that nature. It’s really about developing a culture, building a close-knit group of players and coaches,” Sloan said.

I asked Sloan how Lunsford resolves conflict.

Tippy said the football team is an extension of Lunsford’s children.

“When I hear him talking to them on the phone or in his office or wherever, it’s almost like they could be a part of our family,” Tippy said. “He’s never went away from that perspective. And he always brought them and disciplines them andall the way. It’s kind of weird.

Lunsford and his wife met in college, and they have been married 16-and-a-half years. The couple has three children.

“I liked his confidence, I liked his athletic ability, his brains. He just had the whole package, and he had a good Christian heart too. It was just perfect for me,” Tippy said.

When asked to describe her husband, the first thing she said was that he’s a very Godly man. She also said he’s a great leader of their family, has a good sense of humor, and is a loving, caring and devoted husband.

She said she would probably describe him in the same way as a coach, just towards the team, players and coaches.

Lunsford’s family isn’t able to have a family dinner most nights because of obligations like football practices and the children’s sport events, so Lunsford’s family starts out every single day they are home with a family breakfast at 6 a.m.

Tippy said that family is the most important thing to her husband, just under his Christian faith. She knew Lunsford would be a good father before they had children, saying they both have a desire for adventure, and he was like a kid at heart.

“I feel like if he treated them the way I was treated by him, he would be a good father,” said Tippy.

Lunsford does bring his work home with him on occasion, said Tippy. She said it’s like his hobby, and she enjoys it too. After every game the team plays, they go home and watch it together again on the TV. If he has a lot of work he has to do and hasn’t been home in awhile, he’ll try to bring it home just so he is present.

Sloan said this line of work is competitive, especially when the stakes get higher. He said sometimes the job can consume you, but you can’t stay here 24, 18, or 19 hours a day. At some point, Sloan said, you have to push yourself, you have to go home and pick up when you left off the next day. Sloan said Lunsford was good for him and really showed him that perspective.
“He really sets that standard with the staff for everybody. He wants us to be husbands and dads and not 27 football coaches,” Sloan said. Tippy said that there are some sacrifices that have to be made, like coming with her husband’s job. All three of their kids are in sports, so she has to hurry and get them all where they’re supposed to be.

“When they get out of school, I am 110 miles an hour getting them to all their stuff, you know, kind of like a single mom would be, and they don’t have daddy to come and watch every single thing they play in. However he’ll be at some,” Tippy said.

She thinks their children understand and are okay with this. The family has also had to move around and leave friends or vice versa. Tippy said she has taught their children from a young age that home is not a place. Home is wherever their mom and dad are.

“The have to have the type of personality to handle that, which I think they all do ... But I know it’s hard, that is a sacrifice. I don’t think they would want a different life though,” Tippy said.

“I asked Tippy if the stress of Lunsford’s job affects home life. She said she didn’t think so, and you wouldn’t know that anything is wrong. After one of the games they lost, her kids couldn’t tell Southern had lost.

“Of course he was upset about the game, but I don’t think he would change his personality,” Tippy said.

I asked Lunsford what his Christian faith meant to him. “All he knew to do was to be a servant leader and not actually carrying the baby like you would expect with me,” Tippy said.

“Of course he was upset about the game, but I don’t think he would change his personality,” Lunsford answered immediately: “It means everything to me. I’m not the perfect human. I’m not even close, but I know where my strength comes from. And I know that my strength comes from the Lord.”

Lunsford said one of his core values is servant leadership, which he tries to apply to his everyday life. He reminds himself, “it ain’t me,” and that it is God. He also said being a servant leader is his philosophy.

The family’s Christian faith is a big part of their home life. Tippy said that lots of kids are stressed out over sports or grades or whatever, and she tries to remind them that’s not the most important thing.

One hardship the Lunsfords had to endure was when they lost their third child at birth in 2010. Tippy said she had carried the baby full term, and he ended up being stillborn. She said it was hard for each of them in different ways.

“All he knew to do was to pray, and I was, of course, at the time, was very mad at God for putting us through all of this, which of course is understanding,” Tippy said. She said Lunsford would leave work in the middle of the day to check on her, and that she, of course, would be crying. He didn’t know what to do, and he would say that they needed to pray.

Lunsford said he could only support her and be there for her.

“That was a pretty trying time because I always felt like I could always fix whatever and I could make everything right and that I couldn’t ... God, really, I think, affected both of us with our faith at that point because we knew we had to rely on Him to get through it,” Lunsford said.

Tippy said this experience caused the whole family to have a different outlook on life, saying that she feels like they don’t sweat the small stuff because it’s all small stuff is very true, and you don’t realize that until you go through something like they did. It affected how she taught her students and parented her children.

“I can see now looking back how good came from that. It touched our family and it touched my heart, and it changed me and him as people.”

Growing up, Lunsford describes his life as normal. He was raised in a Christian family in a two-parent home, and he was always taken care of. His dad and grandfather taught him work ethic from an early age. He wasn’t rich, but he wasn’t poor. Lunsford’s personal influences were his parents and grandparents. He said that he had struggles and it wasn’t perfect, but he definitely can’t complain about his childhood.

“I was well taken care of and shown the right way and shown how to live the right way,” Lunsford said.

Sloan said Lunsford’s coaching style is like his—and it’s part of what drove him to come back and be a part of the staff. He said Lunsford has a good energy and relationship with the players: “It’s not an us and them. It’s we.”

“This is my 27th year, so I’ve been around a bunch of different coaches at a bunch of different levels and so you see and learn from a lot of people you come into contact with. You see some of the screamers and yellers and barkers. Kids don’t really respond to that, not like maybe they did 30 years ago,” Sloan said.

Sloan explained that Lunsford’s style is more of a teacher and embracer.

“Reinforce the positive, correct the negative, but reinforce the positive and really build them up instead of beat them down,” Sloan said.

Sloan has no doubt that this is what’s making the team so successful this year. Sloan said Lunsford’s positive mindset is an upbeat culture that bleeds into the staff and down to the players.

Werts said they do a lot of team bonding during the off-season. They’ve done different things together like go to the movies, play volleyball and sometimes the coaches invite them to dinner.

“I feel like that’s also a big reason why we’ve come to have success this year. Because he does stuff like that and kind of brings us in closer and brings the brotherhood even tighter than what it is,” Werts said.

Werts said what you see is what you get with Coach Lunsford, and that he doesn’t really change for anyone.

Werts said, “He is himself, he’s always himself. That’s what I like about him. You know the kind of person you’re going to get every day.”

Eagles stifled with first loss of season to ETSU

In their first outing since winning the Islands of the Bahamas Showcase, the Georgia Southern Eagles lost to East Tennessee State University, 69-64, for the team’s first loss of the season.

GS started off strong in Hanner, building a seven point lead within the first three minutes of play. A quick ETSU timeout resulted in the Bucs changing their offensive strategy, eventually taking the lead.

“I thought we showed toughness, I thought we battled,” Head Coach Mark Byington said. “This game will come back to help us later on.”

Both teams struggled with shot accuracy, with GS shooting just 16.7 percent from beyond the arc throughout the game. ETSU’s efficient shooting just 23 percent.

“GS had several turnovers, racking up 19 total during regulation. The Bucs utilized this weakness to score on multiple fast breaks. Several missed shots and consecutive sloppy possessions caused the Eagles to go into halftime down 32-27.

After the half, GS started playing with more intensity, narrowing the deficit to one point. Eventually, GS took the lead multiple times. Quan Jackson finished with 13 points and six rebounds, and Tookie Brown had 16 points and four rebounds, critical to getting the team’s momentum back on track.

Montae Glenn, the 6’8” powerhouse from Carrollton, was held scoreless in the first half due to being double-teamed by the Bucs but finished with four points.

“It was a struggle tonight, because they had more than one guy on him,” Brown said. “It frustrated him a little bit, but overall I think he played well.”

On a more positive note, Iowa State transfer Simeon Carter touched the court for the first time as an Eagle and was welcomed with thunderous applause from the stands. Carter contributed four points, one rebound and a block.

While both teams are extremely talented, the game was laden with mistakes. The match really came down to the last few minutes, but the poor time management in the last 50 seconds and a lapse in defense caused the Eagles to be handed their first loss of the season.

Eagles pick up win over Thanksgiving break, improve to 2-4

Over the holiday break, the Georgia Southern women’s basketball team fell to Stony Brook University but prevailed against the Bethune-Cookman Wildcats. They are holding on to a 2-4 record. Here’s what you missed.

After bringing home the first win of the season behind a strong performance against Savannah State on Nov. 15, the Eagles made a lengthy trip to Stony Brook, New York to take on the 2-1 Seawolves on Nov. 20.

Behind a sloppy first half on defense, 23 turnovers and too many missed shots, GS went into halftime in a 32 point deficit. Alexis Brown had a team-high 14 points and Nakol Franks finished with eight points and eight rebounds.

The two attempted to propel the team during the second half, which resulted in 19 points scored in the third quarter, but GS fell short to lose 72-43.

Seawolves scored 26 points from GS turnovers alone and had a solid game on offense, with 40 points from the paint.

Returning home after the holiday on Sunday at Hanner Fieldhouse, the Eagles hosted the Bethune-Cookman Wildcats. Brown was spectacular with a 27-point game, and it was a spot-on day for Hailey Dias-Allen with 17 points and nine rebounds.

A fast break by Franks in the final seconds was what the Eagles needed to triumph 77-76. Franks’ fight for the final shot showed her aggression during this game, sealing in her five defensive rebounds.

The Wildcats’ standout guard, Angel Golden, was allowed 32 points by the GS defense and went head to head against Brown. With 17 load changes, this game was the most exciting game for the Eagles yet.

Lunsford's Success Rewarded with Contractual Incentives

By McClain Baxley

Tuesday marked a year since Chad Lunsford was officially named head coach of the Georgia Southern football team. His initial contract provided him with an annual base salary of $650,000 and an $85,000 buyout. The contract also includes incentives and bonuses contingent on the team’s success. With the team having many successes this year, several different bonuses will appear on Lunsford’s inaugural head coaching paycheck.

The first incentive that Lunsford succeeded is $6,000, for the team winning seven games. The seventh game was won with a victory over Appalachian State on Oct. 26. Lunsford also earned an additional $2,000 worth of bonuses with wins eight and nine against Coastal Carolina and Georgia State, respectively. Lunsford will likely pick up another $5,000 for his team being selected to a bowl game Sunday, which brings his total incentive sum to $15,000 this season, and there are still opportunities for more.

Should Lunsford win Sun Belt Coach of the Year and/or National Coach of the Year, he’ll be rewarded $5,000 for each award.

Final National Bowl Projections for the Eagles

By McClain Baxley

After the season finale win against Georgia State, the Eagles concluded their season at 9-3 and 6-2 against Sun Belt teams. This week, the Cure Bowl and Arizona Bowl were taken off the table, so it’s likely down to two Alabama bowls. Now all that’s left to do is wait for the bowl schedule to come out Sunday to find out who and where GS will play its second bowl in program history.

For the final time of 2018, the national media has turned in their final bowl game projections:
