Straight Talk' insults teachers intelligence

The result of the first real test of the "Straight Talk" campaign this week was that the teachers were able to score some points and the campaign was blunted.

The "Straight Talk" campaign, which is aimed at "educating" the public about the professionalism of teachers and the need to support education, was launched in earnest this week. The campaign's goal is to challenge the teachers' reputation as lazy, underpaid, and unappreciated.

However, the teachers were able to expose the campaign's tactics as dishonest and manipulative. They pointed out that the campaign's claims were not based on facts, but rather on scare tactics and emotional appeals.
