Our "growth rate"—and taxes

We have heard a great deal about the "growth rate" recently. It may very well be that we are not growing fast enough.

As a matter of fact, I think we should be growing faster. The world is getting smaller, but we are not growing commensurately.

There are several ways in which we can increase our "growth rate." One is to encourage people to have more children. Another is to improve education so that we can attract more talent into our community.

In addition, we need to invest in infrastructure such as roads and bridges. This will not only provide immediate benefits but also set us up for future growth.

With these strategies, we can ensure that our "growth rate" is not only sustainable but also equitable for all residents.

What is Maturity?

In an article by Russell, he explores the concept of maturity. He defines maturity as the ability to accept responsibility for one's actions and to make decisions based on a clear understanding of consequences.

He argues that maturity is not just about being old but about having life experience and learning from it. It involves developing a sense of self-awareness and being able to adapt to changing circumstances.

Maturity also requires an ability to think critically and to analyze situations objectively. It involves being able to put aside emotional reactions and focus on what is truly important.

Through this lens, maturity becomes a process of growth and development that allows individuals to become more self-sufficient and capable of making informed decisions.
