A Good Way To Run A Court

IN BRUNSWICK the City Court of Glynn county is one which might well become a model for City Courts in other counties, including Bulloch.

Inaugurated as an experiment, it is now considered successful by lawyers and lawmakers.

This opinion is also held by thousands of citizens who have appeared before the court as plaintiffs and defendants, and confirmed by the satisfactory manner in which their cases were handled.

The court is different in two ways: the judge is not required to engage in politics to obtain office, and the minimum of delay in hearing cases of minor offenses.

Another unusual feature of the court is that it is on court in which the citizen actually is allowed two opportunities to disprove charges brought against him for criminal offenses within the scope of the court.

An accused person, whether tourist or resident, may go before the judge of the court immediately after being arrested. He will be given a hearing in the presence of his accusers and the judge will announce a verdict. The defendant, if dissatisfied, may post whatever bond the judge decides would be equivalent to a fine and obtain a jury trial during the regular monthly jury session of the court.

Thus he has the advantage of verdicts by both judge and jury, which many a person accused of wrong-doing has longed for. The judge may free him on the spot, or he may win the jury's favor later.

Every four years the judge must stand on his record in an election. The people go to the polls solely for the City Court election and vote either to retain the judge in office for another term or to retire him. In Brunswick, W. G. Little has served as judge of the court since it was established in 1945. He is available for hearing cases six days a week, staying in his office for the purpose on Saturdays, although the remainder of the courthouse is closed on that day.

Most defendants found guilty accept the verdict.

Many tourists pass through Glynn county, just as many tourists pass through Bulloch county. In Glynn trade officials aware of the importance of goodwill feel that the court has earned its way many times over.

They cite as an example the case of a northern tourist arrested last week for driving near a school bus. The tourist believed he had been wrongly charged and his wife and daughter supported him.

There was no accident, and Judge Little found the tourist not guilty, only an hour after the arrest. The tourist, when told he could recover his $25 bond from the sheriff, was amazed.

After fighting for vindication and return of the money, he was so heartened that he said he wanted the court to keep the money and give it to a church or a charity.

Judge Little said the court preferred that the man take the money and dispose of it himself. He went to the sheriff's office, where he asked the way to the nearest church, and was last seen parking his car in front of it.

To learn that there is a court in our state in which there is no dawdling, no piddling, along with the administration of justice, is refreshing.

It sounds to us like the way a court should be set up and run. It looks to us like one worthy of trying out in Bulloch county.

WE'RE OFF TO THE PRESS INSTITUTE
While you read this we will be on our way to old Athens, Tenn. to take part in the annual Georgia Press Institute at the University of Georgia. It is here that we newspaper people get together every year to hear the nation's outstanding personalities tell us of what's happening over the world; to sit around and talk shop; and to renew our membership in our mutual admiration society.

MOSS DOESN'T KILL TREES
All these years we thought that Spanish moss was a parasite, like mistletoe, and that if it were growing on a tree, it would, in time, destroy the tree.

And now we learn that that's not so at all. Comes a release this week from C. Norwood Hastie, Jr., owner of Magnolia Gardens near Charleston, answering criticisms by visitors from other sections of the country that he is letting the Spanish moss smother Magnolia Gardens.

He allows that Spanish moss is not a parasite, like mistletoe, which attaches itself to a tree and derives its sustenance from the sap of the host tree. He says that moss is an air plant, and will grow on a wooden fence, or a telephone wire. It can be spread by tiny seeds, but most commonly it is blown from place to place. Moss does not attach itself to a tree, but just drapes itself over a branch.

Mr. Hastie says his main concern is whether he shall be believed when he explains that not only does moss live off the dust in the air, but that as Tillandsia usneoides (TILLANDSIA—"an immense genus of epiphytic bromeliaceous plant confined to tropical and subtropical America." USNEOIDES—"a genus of parasiticoles lichens (tree moss)... according to Webster), it is a member of the family that includes pineapples.

We believe him. And so it makes us happy to know that the Spanish moss is not killing all the beauty of the camellias and azaleas in what John Galsworthy called "the most beautiful garden in the world."

WE LIKE METTER
We visited our neighboring town, Metter, last Saturday afternoon. It's a pretty community. We like the wide boulevard streets throughout the town. And all the parking places in the business section must make it a joy for Candler county people when they go to town.

The seven-mile stretch of U. S. 31 from Statesboro to Pine Inn was like driving along South Main street at 5 o'clock in the afternoon. The tourist traffic was that heavy. It only emphasizes the fact that Statesboro must do something about the traffic in our town... and soon.

WE CREATE A PROBLEM
We created a problem at West Main and College streets one afternoon last week. Since we have had so much to say about traffic conditions, and those who ignore our traffic rules and safety practices, we are careful to observe them all ourselves.

So, coming to the blinker light at West Main and College, we came to a full stop. The driver behind us thought we were nuts... stopping right in the middle of the street for, to him, no reason. The driver on College street going north crossed lickety-split, with never a thought of the blinker light. The driver on College street going south, taking advantage of the situation, sailed by in front of us. We inched under the light, and another driver, ignoring the light, screamed to a tire-sliding stop to avoid hitting us... and all while traffic on West Main towed town (East) whistled by, thinking, "we're sure, that we should be hauled into court for obstructing traffic."

We finally made it. We think maybe now we've figured it out. We noticed that there is no sign under the blinker light which warned drivers to "Stop—Then Go." There used to be one hanging under the light. So, maybe we were not supposed to stop before going on.

It's all sort of confusing. Like making right turns on a red light at the traffic control lights. Like ignoring pedestrian traffic which has the right of way on green lights. Like double parking. Like speeding.

as she appeared at a party at Sewell house in a royal blue frock with black accessories and wearing a lovely pink camelia. Mrs. Nightingale will go from here to Florida for a brief visit.

OF INTEREST to their friends and relatives in Statesboro is the wonderful trip which Lawton and Zada Brannen are taking. Leaving Miami by plane, they are flying to South America, and by plane, train, and boat, they will visit every South American capital. "It is a dream of a lifetime," Lawton admitted.

REGARDLESS of resolutions and bills passed by the legislature, I am heartily in accord with the resolution introduced by House administration leaders commending Rebecca Franklin for fairness and exceptional ability in reporting news as a former Journal staff writer covering the Georgia House. Furthermore, the House officially congratulated Mrs. Rebecca Franklin Morehouse for her new position—that of contributing editor to Time magazine. Personally, we admit that the first thing we look for in the Sunday Journal-Constitution is Rebecca's theater roundup.

WE REMEMBER especially this week Mrs. J. G. Bilch, who is ill at her home on North Main street, and Mrs. Ernestine Kena, who is now recuperating from an operation at her home on South Main street.

As ever,
JANE.

Mothers Discuss Teenagers' Trials And Tribulations

By VIRGINIA RUSSELL

THESE IS a little booklet entitled "Guiding the Adolescent" and printed by the U. S. Children's Bureau. This booklet, or some similar publication, should doubtlessly be in use in many of our homes today. Because in guiding the adolescent we certainly need all the help that can be found.

At a recent social gathering several mothers of teenagers (or adolescents) were discussing their trials and tribulations with their offspring. Some were parents of girls, some parents of boys, but their problems varied only slightly. Some were worried about the custom of steady dating; some were worried because their children never told them anything about their affections, etc.

This conversation was very refreshing because I personally had hidden in my heart an uneasiness over an adolescent who apparently had always thought his folks nice until lately when he has begun to find us quite old fashioned and queer, even neurotic, as he himself terms it.

And I thought that I could take him in stride because I had already seen his older brother through his adolescence! But it doesn't work. Adolescence doesn't conform to a pattern (unless in a most general way); each patient reveals his own whimsies, or is afflicted by different adolescent quirks. The worst period of the son was one in which the accompanied every description he gave with sound effects and bodily movements. If it were an airplane that had just seen, it came shrieking down through the living room or dining room, looping and banking in the vicinity of my prized vase or tureen. Or if he were retaining a conversation he had had with a talkative woman, his face went into more grimaces than that of a monkey with a flea in his ear and emitted the sound of "Yakity, yak, yakity, yak." And if the description required the contortions of his whole body, and he were at the dinner table, he must push back his chair (usually upsetting something as he did so) and act out the part of a horse, or molar tooth, or a goat. During these times, my food, as it entered my stomach, seemed to take the form of an airplane, a two-horse wagon (with its team, of course).

The passage of time and the immaturity of the younger's phase has made that of the older boy seem mild by comparison. And, too, his attack is different. His disease is that of outraged feelings over the many delinquencies of his parents. And so I try to cater to him by seeming to enjoy being called neurotic and to reveal in his admonition, "Now, Mama, don't get excited." And I try to answer his whims. Last summer he was disgraced to be seen swimming with his family because of my ten-year-old swimsuit. A new one didn't seem to change the figure that wore it. So I gave up the ghost and am now just marking time. As my grandmother used to tell my mother, "Just try to live through this stage and everything will be all right." (But what about these other up and coming adolescents of mine?)

When I realized I was not alone in my struggle, I felt happier. And a telephone conversation brought me further enlightenment. A friend called to ask a question of the teen-ager, who was absent at the time. With outward honesty I confessed that I believed that I could give her the answer for him, but that I had been told time and again to "let me mind my own business." In an awed tone the friend said, "Oh, does he speak to you? Our son never speaks to me, not even to tell me to mind my own business. Why, he doesn't even sit with us in church any more. Oh, it must be nice to have a special boy."

Maybe our great government will come to our rescue and print a book entitled "Adolescent's Guidebook for Tolerating Parents."

Keep Ga. Green Week Observed By Local Farmers

Keep Georgia green week, now being observed by the Bulloch County Forestry Unit, is a highly important event for the many citizens whose daily living is affected by the health and welfare of this county's 284,083 acres of forestland.

Sponsors of Keep Georgia Green week, the Georgia Forestry Commission and the Georgia Forestry Association, realize that the citizen who plays his part in keeping his own county green through being careful with fire in or near the woods is contributing a substantial share to the over-all program of Keeping Green the entire state.

The sponsors realize further that this special week now being observed is significant in that it focuses attention on the ravages which wildfire can bring to a community such as this in which forest products play a large part in the county's economy. They know, however, that this attention must be spotlighted not merely for one special week, but for 52 weeks a year.

The special programs which Bulloch County civic clubs will present this week, the impressive observances of Keep Georgia Week held in Bulloch County schools, and the forestry recognition which citizens of this area have given this special week have a deep value which cannot be underestimated.

Blue Mold Is Reported By Ogeechee, Warnock and Sinkhole Farm Groups

Blue mold was reported in the Warnock, Sinkhole and Sinkhole Farm Bureau areas last week.

Growers stated they were having difficulty bringing under control with fungicides. However, most of them had sprayed and, then, too, weather conditions since January 31 have been ideal for the spread of mold.

It was reported at these meetings that the Coastal Bermuda seedlings could now be procured at the farm of R. L. Roberts and J. B. Bowers.

Mr. and Mrs. C. B. McAllister were guests of the Sinkhole Farm Bureau at their meeting at G. B. Bowers' pond. A fish supper was served the group.

James N. Akins, Warnock president, outlined the changes in plans for the next visit of the bloodmobile and stated that Warnock would be asked to supply 50 donors for this visit.

The Sinkhole group condemned state PMA officials for eliminating purchase orders on pasture seed and asked that the county chapter take some action to try to have it restored.
