This could be the story of the Great Birth at Bethlehem as it might have been seen through the eyes of two average citizens of the day.

IT BEGAN in Bethlehem, at registration time, King Herod had ordered that all should register, so my father and I had joined hundreds from near and far on the trek to the City of David.

The streets were noisy and crowded, but we were soon settled comfortably in the quarters father secured for us with a small bag of coins. Others were not so fortunate. Most of the accommodations had been taken earlier and that which was left commanded a price most of the travelers were unable to pay.

Though tired from our long journey, the noise and excitement of my first trip away from home caused me to spend a rather sleepless night. The Innkeeper had posted a "No Room" sign on the door, yet there was an almost constant rap from newly-arrived travelers seeking rooms, most of whom begged only for a place to stretch out and rest their road-weary bodies. The Innkeeper turned them all away, refusing to further cramp his already crowded guests. He almost forcibly closed the door on one insistent traveler who pleaded that he had a sick wife who must have shelter immediately.

"I have my troubles, too, my friend," was his caustic reply.

I walked to the window and then I saw the star.

It appeared suddenly, and was by far the most brilliant I had ever seen. So bright was its light that on the near hillside I could see a stable where a number of people were gathered; excited people, it seemed, because of the manner in which they moved about and gestured to one another. It was much too far for me to hear the sound of their voices, but I promised myself that on the morrow I would visit the stable and discover the cause of the excitement.

After the morning meal, I excused myself from my father's presence and started for the hillside. Nearing the stable, I was met by a young shepherd.

"There was excitement here last night," he said. "Yes," I replied, "I saw it from my window. What happened?"

"A King was born, in this very stable."

"A King?"

"A fine King. The King of all men."

"How foolish. Everyone knows that Herod is the only King. And, for a King to be born in a stable. What manner of King might he be?"

"The angels have proclaimed that He is the King of all men. I myself heard them." He looked up to the sky. "And, I saw them, too."

"And you saw this King?"

"I looked upon Him with my own eyes and I gave Him one of my most precious treasures—a newborn lamb. Of course, He could not speak, but His mother thanked me profusely for it."

"Then you are the foolish one, shepherd boy. I would not waste my time to look upon a King of sheep and animals who would be born in the cold dampness of a miserable stable, nor would I offer Him so much as a blade of grass. He be no King at all. Someone has deceived you."

I went away, telling myself that I did not believe the shepherd's story, yet, strangely afraid to enter the stable to look upon the child. Were He truly a King, I would have been terrified in His presence.

In the streets of the city, there was much whispering and gathering about. Moving from one group to another, I found that the excitement centered about the strange events that had taken place at the stable.

This I heard from the tongue of a venerable old man: "I looked upon Him as He lay there in the unkept surroundings of that stable and it seemed to me that the very atmosphere seemed changed because of His presence. I say there is something exceptional about this child." And another, lifting his arms toward the sky, said in low voice, "Surely, this is the King promised to us long ago." A promised King, born in a stable. I thought. How confusing; it leaves me puzzled.

And there in the center of the largest group of all, I saw the shepherd boy, eager listeners pressing about him. He had been tending his sheep on a hillside, he said, when angels appeared, telling him to go to Bethlehem, where he would find a newborn King laid in a manger. He had been terribly frightened, but the angel had cautioned him to fear not, but to go to the stable with joy in his heart. Leaving his sheep untended, he had come to Bethlehem. Other shepherds had come too, as well as three men in royal robes who had come from a far distant land; guided, they said, by the light of a bright star that had bathed the stable and its surroundings in shining brilliance.

How I envied the shepherd boy at this moment—and chided myself for not having looked upon this King-child so that I too, might have a story to tell. After all, I had seen the stable and the excited people from my window, but what sort of a story could I make from that?

My father's business had not kept him so occupied that he had not heard of the birth of the so-called child-king. As we were preparing to leave the city for the long journey home, he asked if I had heard anything in the market place. When I told him the things I had seen that night and the talk I had heard on the streets, he said that we would visit the stable as it was on the route that led us out of the city. "We must see the birthplace of the King," he said.

It was indeed a simple shelter, little more than four walls. Through a hole in the roof the morning rays of the sun slanted downward, casting a bright halo of light on the stable's only furniture, a crude manger where the child must have lain. Reflections from the sparse straw scattered there made it appear to be lined with shining wisps of gold.

"So, this is the birthplace of a King," my father said, in an unbelieving tone. "How uncomfortable for a King." He walked forward, stopping just outside the shaft of light that encircled the manger. He reached out as if to catch the sunlight in his hand and for a moment he stood there, motionless. Then he jerked his hand away, as if he had been burned by a torch.

Curious, I stepped forward and extended my own hand, half expecting to be burned or to experience some form of shock, but the ray of light felt only warm and comforting. Again my father extended his arm and this time he did not draw it back, but stood there his eyes resting unbelievably on the manger.

And then suddenly I saw the reason for his bewilderment, and impulsively I drew back. Here indeed was an illusion or a miracle!

The glittering light seemed to form an uncatchable aura about the crude crib and though the hand could pierce that light and move back and forth, it cast not a single shadow upon the glowing manger, nor even slightly dimmed the gold-like lustre of the wisps of straw scattered there. This was no earthly light, no simple ray from the sun.

We knelt there in the stillness of the stable, a man who was no longer cynical; a child who had discovered faith. For one brief moment it seemed that the most tender scene was repeated; the God-like Child, wrapped in swaddling clothes, slept peacefully in the manger while the tender and loving hands of His Mother hovered about Him.

And in the distance, there sounded the voices of the angels repeating our whispered words of praise. "Hail to the King — A King has been born in Bethlehem!"

PERSONNEL OF MINKOVITZ AND BEN FRANKLIN STORES ENTERTAINED

The lovely home of Mr. and Mrs. Ike Minkovitz on the Portal Road was the scene Thursday evening of the annual Christmas party given by Mr. Minkovitz for the personnel of H. Minkovitz and Sons, Inc. This year the employees at the new Ben Franklin store were included.

The Christmas season furnished the theme which began with an out-door Santa Claus with the season's greetings. The front door was screened with lovely Christmas cards from the Minkovitz fine collection. The mantle in the living room featured Rudolph, the red-nosed reindeer with the nose electrically illuminated. From Rudolph wide strips of red ribbon led to three little reindeer racing in the snow apparently starting on a world-wide trip. The world was a large snow laden globe. In the dining room card tables were set up with Christmas covers. On each table green candles rose from white bases with holly with glistening green leaves and red berries. Candles and other beautiful arrangements were evident throughout the home.

Six valuable door prizes were given. There were eighty guests

Preston advocates three-point program for tobacco farmers

Rep. Prince Preston today expressed optimism that the plight of tobacco farmers faced with a 20 per cent acreage cut might be relieved by a three-point program which he advocates for immediate adoption. The three-point program, about which the First District Representative has conferred with Chairman Harold Cooley of the House Agriculture Committee, embodies three parts:

1. Placing the land taken out of tobacco production by the 20 per cent acreage cut into the Soil Bank.
  2. Increasing the price of payments in the Soil Bank from 18 cents per pound for average yield to 25 cents per pound.
  3. Lowering price supports on the undesirable "slick" type tobacco, for which there is little sale, to 50 per cent of parity.
- "By placing the 20 per cent cut in tobacco acreage into the Soil Bank tobacco farmers will be assured of sizeable cash returns on this land which would otherwise produce no income," Preston pointed out.
- "At the same time tobacco production would be curtailed and the surplus reduced.
- "Increasing the price for Soil Bank payments from 18 cents a pound, as already announced, to 25 cents per pound will increase the farmers' income and provide added incentive to cooperate fully," the First District Representative explained.
- "The unworkable surplus now on hand is caused, in large degree, by the production of undesirable, 'slick' type tobacco largely in North Carolina," Preston stated. "The cutting of price supports on this tobacco would restrain growers from planting this type of leaf which is a glut on the market and practically all of which has to be purchased at government support prices."

The Bulloch Herald Statesboro, Georgia, Thursday, December 20, 1956

The First District has outlined the steps he expects to take as rapidly as possible, but pointed out that legislation, where needed, could not be adopted before Congress convenes in January.

"The Department of Agriculture offers no opposition to these devices to aid the tobacco farmers, according to information revealed to me by Chairman Cooley," Preston added.

Preston went on to say that the placing of the additional tobacco acreage in the Soil Bank at the increased price would require the appropriation of additional funds by the Congress. He explained that lack of funds now available would have to be overcome.

"As a member of the Appropriations Committee, I feel that I can assure that increased Soil Bank funds will be appropriated to prevent the utter ruin of our small tobacco growers," Preston said. He pointed out that almost one-half of the tobacco farmers in

Rockwell employees contribute 30 pints of blood to Bloodmobile

On the recent visit of the Red Cross Bloodmobile, employees of Rockwell Statesboro Corporation donated more than thirty pints.

Constant publicity within the plant by the personnel department resulted in 103 employees volunteering to participate in the program. With the aid of the Statesboro Police Department, a car lift from the plant to the Recreation Center was organized to transport employees. An added incentive was created when General Manager R. A. Purcell indicated that employees would be allowed to go during working hours without loss of pay.

About four loads of employees made the trip before the end of work. Many of those who had volunteered to donate were from the surrounding districts and had commuted with them and were therefore unable to get to the Recreation Center. A number of local employees, however, did make it after work and pushed the number of Rockwell donors to more than thirty.

Many first-time donors, and quite a few former donors gave a pint of blood. Employees unable to attend expressed a strong desire to be included in the next "donor lift" when the Red Cross Bloodmobile comes to town.

Farm and Family Features

Farm Bureau Farm Bureaus put emphasis on Christmas at meetings last week

Christmas was the major item of interest at the Farm Bureau meetings last week at Warnock and Sinkhole.

Warnock presented a short play on Christmas Advice with Misses Annette and Lanette Bird, Carl Bird and Johnny Whaley as actors and Mrs. Horace Bird, the director.

Larry Bird gave a reading. Trapped. The rest of the program at Warnock was devoted to songs led by the group putting on the play under Mrs. Bird's direction and eating fruit, candy, cake and nuts.

The Sinkhole group had a short business program on tobacco varieties and the acreage reduction led by Carlton Kirby, assistant county agent, and then devoted the rest of their evening to songs by the entire group. Portia got more serious with their meeting Thursday night with Miles Frank Deal, county A.S.C. officer, on hand to talk A.C.P. soil bank acreage allotments of all kinds.

This was a meeting being held to replace the November meeting that came on Thanksgiving Day.

Christmas gets right many of the coming meetings, with Edna and Opechee going strictly for fun this week on Tuesday and Wednesday nights. No business but all play, cake, and songs.

None of the chapters will meet next week. All take off for Christmas, West Side, Stillson and family type farm group that Charles Rushing, a senior at Marvin Pittman High School, is achieving honors galore for an essay he submitted into county contest sponsored by the News-papers of Georgia. This time, if success again brings first prize to Charles, he will receive a scholarship totaling $500.

Charles is a good student with a special interest in F.F.A. work and mathematics. He is still undecided as to what college he wants to attend, but is considering G.T.C. and Georgia Tech.

Marvin Pittman agriculture teacher, J. P. Folds said that the students who entered the competition did all their own work, with very few references. These boys worked hard and long on their papers before entering them in the competition. County judges remarked that Charles' paper was "head and shoulders above all the other
