SHOULD OUR SCHOOLS BE REMOVED FROM POLITICS?

EDITOR'S NOTE: During a panel discussion at the Georgia Progress Program held recently at the Teachers' College the following suggestion was made to provide for a more efficient school administration:

- (a) Making the county the local school district with the schools under the direction of an elected board of education and a county school superintendent who is selected by the board.
(b) Give the county school superintendent authority to nominate his teachers from a list certified by the State Department of Education.

During the discussion the question was asked if the above suggestions were adopted would it eliminate politics in our school system. The answer by a leading educator of Columbus was "Yes."

Following through on the subject we present this week an editorial written by a Bulloch Countyman which we believe will be of interest to everyone interested in improving our educational system.

TO REMOVE our schools from politics is impossible and probably undesirable. In fact, politics is really another term for public relations. Schools would undoubtedly defeat their own purpose if they tried to operate without a program of public relations. As citizens interested in making our country a better place in which to live, however, we need a program of public relations that tends to favor no particular individual or particular interests. We need one that helps to build a democracy in which all can share of its benefits as fairly as possible. If our schools are to contribute their best toward the interests of a democracy, it is important that they not be governed by a type of public relations or politics that limits the benefits. A dictionary definition states that "politics is a wide looking-out for one's own interests." We should plan a public relations program in which there is a wide looking-out for the schools' interests. However, our present form of politics is based too much on selfishness, greed, and ignorance to accomplish the right ends. There is competition to see who can grab the most of the benefits.

This article will deal with one method that tends toward the improved type of public relations or politics in the schools. It has to do with the selection of county superintendents in the State of Georgia.

The County Superintendent in most of the counties in Georgia are elected by popular vote. A more efficient way of selecting County Superintendents of Schools would help to prevent much of the type of politics that tend to reduce the potential efficiency of the school. In a few counties in Georgia and in some other sections of the United States, the County Superintendents are selected by boards or committees. In such counties, the qualifications of many candidates from sections not restricted to the local county, are studied carefully in terms of their efficiency in the administration of schools. The board learns much more about the candidates than do all of the people in a county could possibly find out no matter how conscientious or enlightened they might be. The candidate finally chosen by the board must, of course, always be conscious of the necessity for a wide program of public relations or politics, but the pressure to do the unfair thing is not so great as it is when his employment depends on the vote of the people influenced by those who hope to gain something for themselves. It eliminates to a large extent the temptation to purchase votes with money, liquor, and other media for personal gain. The candidate chosen by a board knows that his retention in office usually depends most on his ability to improve instruction of schools, on his ability to buy the most education for the money allotted to the board, on his ability to keep the people happy with the way the schools operate, on his honesty in dealing with problems, and on his interest in building a better community.

Of course, many County Superintendents elected by popular vote would like to feel that their retention in office depends on their success in the administration of schools. Many do their best to improve education in their counties. Past observation and experience have taught them, however, that political forces connected with popular election tend to push the interests of children into the background at election time. Conscientious as most of the electorate might be, it does not have time or ability to study the relative values of all of the present or future possibilities in the candidates for such an important position as is the county superintendency. They will be influenced by forces too strong to combat. The popularly elected County Superintendent knows, too, that his line-up with winning political forces in the County will have much to do with his retention regardless of his ability as a school administrator. He knows that money, favoritism, liquor, selfishness, in one form or another, become the strongest forces in an election, not that because the people as a whole are bad, nor that any of the county superintendent candidates are bad, but because the system permits some such pressure from ever-present destructive forces. Some even regard the position of county superintendent as a favor that ought to be passed around, and that no person should hold office more than two terms. The children pay the price.

In the second place, it is difficult to get good school administrators interested in becoming candidates for the county superintendency if they must be elected by popular vote. The forces that stand in the way of helping children live more abundantly are disgusting to them, especially when the obstacles can not be removed. Many of the best school administrators would rather seek positions in the cities or in counties in which their employment depends on careful study of their qualifications by a board of education.

Some people contend that democracy demands that all people must have direct voices in all public affairs. This attitude, however, often means biting off one's nose to spite one's face. They may get the privilege of direct expression, but they often lose the possible benefits. The most enlightened people become, however, the more they realize that the best work is not done when each person voices all his desires directly. They realize that democracy will serve most of the people best when detailed and extremely important jobs are delegated to a few people. In the case of the county superintendency, it is best that the selection be left to the county board of education. Though the selection of school administrators by boards or committees does not free the schools of all undesirable politics, it does help to elevate the type of public relations program. It helps to do the following: (1) It places a greater premium on school efficiency than on political power. (2) It reduces the temptation to employ the use of money, liquor and favoritism as forces to retain or elect people for school work.

(3) It reduces the temptation to employ teachers related to as many influential people regardless of ability to teach. (4) It increases the possibility of getting well-qualified school men interested in becoming county superintendents. (5) It increases the possibility that well-qualified county superintendents will be employed. If the board is unable to find the man that best fits the job in the local county, it may comb the state for the best man. (6) It increases the possibility that more of the best qualified school men and women will be interested in staying in their home areas to help build better communities. As it is, many of our best men go where opportunities to succeed without so much use of undesirable political pressures are greater.

To summarize: The selection of county superintendents by popular vote encourages unfair and destructive politics, the county superintendents should be chosen by a county board of education. We can see good examples for such procedures in our own state: Bibb, Chatham, Richmond and Glynn Counties. In these counties, the county superintendents are selected by boards of education.

Should our schools be removed from politics? Probably not, but much can be done to improve our program of public relations or politics by the adoption of a more intelligent method of selecting county superintendents of schools.

Monday, May 6, will be the red-letter day for the politicians in Georgia. For that is the first day when it will be possible to determine exactly how many Georgia voters will be eligible to take part in the September primary. Registrations must be filed and poll taxes paid not later than May 4. Experts look for a top figure of eligibles—near 400,000.

Make sure that you can vote—go register and pay your poll tax.

Last week we wrote an editorial entitled "It's a Pity." Monday of this week the Atlanta Journal reprinted the most of the editorial under the title, "The Lethargic Citizen," with this comment: "Complacency is general in every section about local, state and national government. But most folk had rather talk than act. Down at Stateboro, The Bulloch Herald gives an interesting example of what it calls the lethargy into which we lapse when confronted with a concrete program for improvement. The paper comments on the Georgia Progress Program as follows: 'More than thirty of Georgia's better informed leaders came here to give us the benefit of their research, study and findings, out of which a better Georgia may be realized. They were here for two days. During the two days, not more than twenty-five of the citizens of Stateboro attended the discussions upon a subject that should be close to the hearts of us all. And except that the students of the college were required to attend the group discussions and general discussions, we would have been embarrassed for the apparent lack of interest on the part of our citizenship.'

"We have only ourselves to blame. The Herald concludes, when we find our State bogged down by a slow, poorly organized, underfunded, antiquated governmental organization. Surely, every city, state or people gets the sort of government it deserves, for it could, if we would, get the government it wants."

It pleases us that our editorials are attracting such state-wide attention.

Woman of the Week

In Bulloch County there are a number of women who, though their fame does not go beyond the First District, the wonders they work within the county are great. Adding nothing to return, Miss Maude White, our "Woman of the Week" this week, will take on any task when it is for the good of the Nevills community where she was born and reared. If she were a man she could be described as a "wheel horse" because of her ability to get things done and with a hearty laugh which is catching when one hears her. We present Miss Maude White, of the Nevills community, as our "Woman of the Week."

Miss White was born and reared over 100 members last summer. Her other interests include library work, being chairman of the library committee of the county P.-T. and a member of the finance committee; she is on the hospitality committee of the Home Demonstration Council; secretary of the Bulloch County Council of the Home Demonstration Club. She started teaching in the fall of 1925. She taught two years at Warnock school and since 1927 has been teaching in the Nevills schools.

Planning A Better Georgia

EDITOR'S NOTE: Possibility to save millions of dollars for the state, while giving hope to thousands of helpless persons, is presented in this second article based on a study of Georgia's crumbling penal system. The report was prepared for the Citizens' Fact Finding Movement.

Georgia has two to three times as many men and women in prison as the average of the forty-eight states. It is revealed in the study of the state's penal system prepared for the Citizens' Fact Finding Movement. It asks the question, "Does not our system itself make for crime and repetition of crime?"

Nearly 30 per cent. of all felony prisoners in the state are illiterate, the report further shows, and quotes Supt. George A. Fisher, of the Georgia state prison, "I think that every state should work out a system whereby every prisoner who is illiterate should be compelled to go to school and be taught at least to read and write."

Pointing to the need for greater understanding of the parole system, the report declares: "There should be better interpretation of long-range social aims to take the place of headlines with which our editors seem instinctively to have a desire to display charges, however ill-founded, of abuse or defects of the system and which are destructive of proper understanding."

With the system deeply rooted in politics it is a demoralizing thing to have a certain number of these charges from time to time that are without genuine justification. We need a better sense of the value of a prisoner. "Last year 453 prisoners in Georgia made breaks for freedom, and while the larger proportion of them were recaptured, every escape and more or less bloodthirsty man is a demoralizing thing, demoralizing to prisoners, to guards and their attitude, to routine, to methods, to the system and the public."

And, dear readers, as unaccustomed as we are to saying it, the muffled sound you hear in this chair is a heart-felt "AMEN, BROTHER."

REPORT OBSERVES: "A program of parole and probation offers more hope of the man in prison than any other single element in a penal system."

Barbs of the Brier Patch Philosopher
Dear Editor: I feel more about promising to go before last that I was going to do better about my writing and then last week not getting in anything at all. I hope you don't mind. Ma has been giving me a lot of attention when she ain't well.

While I been setting here in our room in front of the little fire I keep going during Ma's sickness I been just thinking about nothing in particular. But my eyes kept wandering out to the wood box where the top of a newspaper is hanging over the side. The printing is upside down but it is big enough for me to read from where I am sitting. It says: "BRITISH AND GERMANS IN A SAVAGE CLASH" I can't help but think about that headline and the world today. All these people there in Europe scared to death of that man Hitler and I felt plumb bad when I read about Denmark and Norway being conquered by them nazis. Denmark is the country where the farmers know more about co-operating with each other than any other country in the world, and when I think of Norway I always remember our fourth grade geographer which showed pictures of Laplanders. I think they were a lot.

And it makes me sad when people think that there are some people right here in the United States that think we ought to get in the war. I think that we ought to do everything under the sun to keep out of it. I don't know so much about such things, but it looks like to me if enough of the people of this country don't want to go to war I don't see how just a few can do it. I don't see how they can say make us go, I know that I ain't saying these things like Dr. Destler would say them, cause he has been studying special on them you? I remember the last war, the parades, the flags flying, the bands playing and people making

Mrs. W.S. Hanner Makes President's Annual Report To Woman's Club

EDITOR'S NOTE: Mrs. W. S. Hanner, immediate past president of the Woman's Club, made the president's annual report at the last meeting of the club and we publish it here in full. Hanner is succeeded by Mrs. Alfred Durham.

"It has been a great pleasure to me this year to be joined with you as president of the Statesboro Women's Club. Our common tasks and interests saw wide as we under a golden chain of friendship, the links of which cannot be easily broken. These have been inspiring days in which we have worked to grow. Our attention has been challenged by new happenings and new demands. Through the years our aims and ideals remain the same, but always we must interpret them in terms of the ever-changing trends of our times. Our study we have tried to bring to our work new vision and new zeal. The joy of shared experience in the pursuit of common purposes belongs to every one of us. I'm sure, and especially to me.

"Space and time make impossible the enumeration of all the worthwhile things which have been accomplished. The reports of other officers and department chairmen have already shown what has been done along their lines.

"If any theme or thought has predominated in our club this year, it seems to me 'Helping our Community To Live a More Abundant Life' would be most appropriate for our activities and progress. We have endeavored to do this by financial donations and investments as well as cultural pursuits.

"Our big projects for the year have been carried on and supported by the club as a whole, rather than individual committees. Some of the committees, however, have had their own individual plans which they have worked out, in addition to the things which were carried on by the club as a unit. The club projects for the year 1939-40 are as follows: A donation of $100 to the child health and welfare council of Bulloch county.

"During Christmas time we maintained a charity fund of ten dollars, which was used for buying things for some of the needy older people of our community. We helped to sponsor a Christmas party for the aged, which was held at the home of Mrs. J. A. Addison, and was very successful. The party was held on the 14th of December. "Our president has attended both of the district meetings held during her regime. The fall meeting was held in Vidalia at which time she gave the response to the address of welcome. At the spring meeting in Savannah, she gave the president's report from this club. A silver loving cup was awarded to the club in the First District contest. The club has the honor of presenting the best report on 'Community Service' for the period 1939-40.

HEATING CONTRACTOR Defines Air Conditioning There has been a great deal of confusion regarding residential air conditioning, with the result that many people are not sure exactly what an air-conditioner is or what it is supposed to do.

The best way to get an idea of the results of air conditioning, according to W. P. Crenshaw, of Southland Furnace & Stoker company, 376 Peachtree street, Atlanta, Ga., is to think of a day in spring when the air is neither too warm nor too cool—neither too humid nor too dry—clear, fresh, invigorating—a gentle breeze without your being conscious of wind. Air conditioning is merely the process of reproducing this delightful atmosphere inside your home throughout the year.

In winter, an air conditioner should warm the air, filter it, humidify it and circulate it. In summer, it should cool the air, filter it, dehumidify it and circulate it. These individual functions are all part of a complete air conditioning system. However, in most homes and climates, positive cooling equipment and dehumidifying equipment have been found rather expensive for the few days in the year during which they would be used. Many home owners find that the circulating air from their winter air conditioners provides the effect being the same as that produced by a huge, slow-turning electric fan.

The way in which the various air conditioners now available perform the functions of air conditioning determines whether the unit will be efficient and satisfactory. Anyone interested in this important new aid to home comfort and health is invited to call at the Southland Furnace & Stoker company in Atlanta for a complete explanation of the essential points which must be considered in buying a heating and air conditioning plant.

"You get Double Range Anti-Knock!" Every motorist knows that there are two important ranges of acceleration where highest anti-knock performance is needed. For example, you need knockless power at 10 to 45 miles per hour for acceleration in traffic and 45 to 90 miles per hour for passing other cars and climbing hills. Some gasolines may give high anti-knock in one range but not in the other. But the new Sinclair H-C combines high anti-knock performance in both ranges. With the Double-Range anti-knock in H-C you also get other remarkable qualities in performance. You get quick starting—rapid pick-up—smooth power—and long mileage. Try a complete tankful of the new Double-Range H-C in your car today. Your nearby Sinclair dealer sells it at regular price. You will find it adds to the pleasure of driving and helps reduce motoring expense as well! Ask for the new Sinclair H-C.
