The HAIRY WINTER or SANDVETCH makes a hay or forage crop superior in feeding and nutritive qualities to Timothy Hay. It will also make the largest yield of dry feed of any crop that can be sown in the Fall. In this respect it is superior to Crimson Clover as it not only makes a larger yield than that crop, but is very much superior in feeding qualities. Wood's Fall Catalogue tells all about Seeds for Fall Planting, Seed Wheat, Oats, Rye, Barley, Vetches, Grass and Clover, Seeds, etc.

A Typical South African

Store.

O. R. Larson, of Bay Villa, Sundays River, Cape Colony, conducted a store typical of South Africa, at which can be purchased anything from the proverbial "needle to an anchor." This store is situated in a valley nine miles from the nearest railway station and about twenty-five miles from the nearest railway station and about twenty-five miles from the nearest trailway station and about twenty-five miles from the nearest trailway station and about twenty-five miles, to many of whom I have supplied Chamberlain's remedies. All testify to their value in a household where a doctor's advice is almost out of the question. Within one mile of my store the population is perhaps sixty. Of these, within the past twelve months, no less than four-teen have been absolutely cured by Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. This must surely be a record." For sale by W. H. Ellis.

Childhood is Not the Happiest Period

By Barry Pain.

HAVE never understood the feelings of those who are sorry that they are full grown. To different children there is, of course, a different childhood; but, as a rule, the happiness of childhood is a delusion and the peace of the baby carriage a myth. I believe that any brave and intelligent man can count on his fingers of one hand the things that would really hurt him seriously; the longer you live the more you reallz

But the troubles of childhood are numberless. The agony of terror is alone enough to make childhood are numberless. The agony of terror is alone enough to make childhood the most miscrable part of one's existence. The dead came out of their graves and walked into my nursery by night; dared not open my eyes lest I should see them. There was a waiting figure behind every curtain in dim-lit passages. There were pictures in books that haunted ; I knew two or three of them well—I knew the page on which they cam pened the book and turned almost up to the dreaded page and then waited I had to go on always. I had to see the eyes staring into mine, and the or other that would take my mind from the picture.

I am glad that I am grown up; F should not care to endure such maddening terrors again. I was far too much ashemed of them then to think that service. no one who, as a child, was afraid of the dark, would look back upon childhood as the pleasantest period of his life. And, if a child has more troubles than a man, he undoubtedly has fewer pleasures. its appetite being temporarily satisfied. From its natural affection for its parents or friends—if that affection is very strong—it gets far more suffering than pleasure. Any man of average intelligence can do better than that; he has work that interests him, books, or music, or pictures that mean far more to him than any child's pleasure means to the child. It is easy to love childen; one of the chief reasons is that pity is akin to love. And on this question f the unhappiness of childhood, I would sooner trust a man's memory than a

The Cause of Jealousy.

By Henry James,

EALOUSY we all know or have heard of. In connection with the Black Warrior sexual passions it plays an enormous part in the lives of all nations, but especially the southern and eastern. That sort of jealousy seems to need heat, sunlight, to bring it to perfection. But there is Weitz's Pride another sort, the jealousy of the artist, that seems to need nothing but the atmosphere of the studio, the concert-room, the opera house, and it immediately begins to flourish with a virulence that leaves nothing to be desired. Every one CORN WHISKEY. begins to flourish with a virulence that leaves nothing to be deared, every one must at some time have asked himself. Why on earth should artists—poets, good or bad, painters, musicians, actors—be so fearfully jealous of one another?

poetry you must be the poet, the man of the day. In painting the same holds poetry you must be the poet, the man of the day. In painting the same holds in a lesser measure; more people can live by painting than by poetry. In military matters also the same is true; a man gets his promotion less through his merit than by being known. In muste a composer must be head and shoulders above his fellows before he can earn his daily bread. And in singing, especially opera singing, a man or woman must have a "name" before he or she can consider his or her position assured. This struggle for pre-eminence would alone account for much of the jealousy of the operatic profession—and also, it might be added, of the actor's profession. But has not the fact of appearing under the public gaze some connection with the matter? There are few people under the public gaze some connection with the matter? There are few people who can be looked at without deteriorating. They become self-conscious, vain, and as soon as vanity comes in jealousy joins it.

respect it is superior to Crimson

A Typical South African Store.

O. R. Larson, of Bay Villa, Sundays River, Cape Colony, conducted a store typical of South Africa, at which can be purchased anything from the proverbial "needle to an anchor." This store is situated in a valley nine miles from the nearest railway station and about twenty-five miles from the nearest town. Mr. Larson says: "I am fayored with the custom of farmers within a radius of thirty miles, to many of whom I have supplied Chamberlain's remedies. All testify to their value in a household where a doctor's advice is almost out of the question. Within one mile of my store the population is perhaps sixty. Of these, within the past twelve months, no less than four-teen have been absolutely cured by Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. This must surely be a record." For sale by W. H. Ellis.
