Great Sacrifice Sale!

In order to reduce my large stock of General Merchandise at once, we have decided to put on a

GENUINE BARGAIN DAY

At Arcola on Saturday, Sept. the 15th, will be the day when you can buy from the undersigned anything in their store at actual Cost.

These goods are all new and first-class in every particular. They were bought before the rise in prices and the price we put on them will be less than they can be bought to-day at wholesale cash prices.

We will have plenty of Clerks to wait on you and see that your wants are attended to. We have the goods that you will need and you can get them now at less money than you can at another time or place in this section during this Fall.

A dollar saved is a dollar earned, and if you will adopt this motto you will find yourself coming to Arcola Saturday, SEPTEMBER 15th. At actual wholesale cost these goods are going. You take advantage of this sale which lasts only One Day, and you will serve your best interest. Cash will be required for all purchases on this occasion, on account of the extreme low prices. Come All

EDITORIALS

It might be well, suggests the Kansas City Journal, also to require the manufacturers of pure olive oil to put on labels telling the year in which the cotton seed was grown.
Divorce statistics indicate, says the Chicago Record-Herald, that in about three cases out of ten it would have been better to have loved and lost, and still better never to have loved at all.
There is no sight in the world more revolting than that of men sunk in ignorance of everything but what other men have written, and with the sense of beauty so keen and the power of expression so cultivated that their sensual caterwauling may almost be mistaken for the music of the spheres.
In a hundred ways France is the country of the married woman. That young girls are still carefully watched and secluded is of minor importance. The system works not badly, declares the New York World. There may even be lands where daughters are too much freedom and power for their own good and where mothers are too meek.
Alabama marble is to be used in the finishing, decorative work on Alabama's new state house, and the Montgomery Advertiser remembers that years ago, when railroads have shown to go—nothing more to live for. And then, Lottie! Over there, about to cross the white roadway, came the dear slight figure that had moved to the city, where she had wanted to leap forward, to shout her name; he could only stand rigid.
Nine o'clock! A thin powder of snow was falling. Paris! He stood on there in the grip of the cold lethargy, because there seemed no more to go—nothing more to live for. And then, Lottie! Over there, about to cross the white roadway, came the dear slight figure that had moved to the city, where she had wanted to leap forward, to shout her name; he could only stand rigid.
Lottie! Lottie, dear heart! One word—do you ever loved me? "Not one—no, not one!" She faltered faintly, but with determination that went to his heart. "Do not come near me," she said. "I shall only ask you, as a man, not to cause unnecessary pain by ever trying to see me again. I hold you to that. Good-bye—Lottie Hayes."

In Angel's Uniform.

Home—and Lottie! Dan Joyce, that strange man with the baggy, boyish face, at which the other boys, whenever he glanced so often, gripped his teeth to keep back a shout—or a sob. Home! For him, the eyes in those white cliffs looked like the gates of a paradise. Dear England—after two and a half years in the Australian bushland! Lottie, and then—his dearest Lottie, waiting for him all these dull months!
He would catch the pale, slight figure by surprise his strong young arms, and tell her that he alone had drawn him back six months before his allotted time, and how he had secretly almost broken his heart to leave her to some other man's romance, with only his old chap Ferrars to watch from a distance that no harm befall her. Only his old chap Ferrars, because of that incredible letter that had reached him in the wilds two months ago!
He was clutching it now. He had just called her to throw the pieces at her feet. Her tired eyes would fill and brim over; she would sob out on his shoulder that she had not expected the word of comfort to come from the loneliness of life seemed too heavy to bear. Yes! He had not once doubted it. His quiet, trusting smile.

HON. HOKE SMITH.

It was nearly 5 o'clock in the afternoon when J. L. Anderson of Atlanta arose to place Mr. Smith's nomination before the convention. The speaker later completely eluded the enthusiasm which greeted the mention of his name by Mr. Anderson.
The assembly rose to greet him and saluted him before they allowed him to proceed. He came into the meeting in voice that sounded like the stroke of a hammer on an anvil.
A new executive committee was chosen, consisting of four members from each congressional district and eleven members from the state at large, to be named within the next few days by Chairman A. L. Miller.
Homer Alexander of DeKalb was made vice chairman of the state committee. The convention then adjourned sine die. Many new changes were proposed in the platform which forms an interesting document in state politics which he has put forward. He urged the delegates present to see their representatives and senators and urge them to stand on the platform upon which he was chosen governor, and then if they refused, ask them to get over the platform, which was already had a working majority in the senate should be men in accord with the platform and believed after longing over the lists that his supporters already had a working majority in the general assembly.
The keynote of Mr. Smith's speech was that everybody holding state office in connection with the administration should be in favor and in line with the reforms which he had advocated so that they may be put through without delay.

James R. Gray and his services in the recent campaign and recommendation for national democratic committee man, Hoke Smith was nominated for governor, and other state house officers were nominated in accordance with the result of the recent primary.
St. G. McLondon of Thomaston, former city attorney for the plant system of railroads, was nominated for railroad commissioner to succeed Jos. M. Brown, whose term expires in October, 1907.
