

Crumbs From the Table of Joy

By Lynn Nottage and directed by Mical Whitaker.

Seventeen year old Ernestine Crump arrives in New York in 1950, a time of change in America. As her widowed father tries to bury his grief in uncompromising religion, and her larger-than-life aunt Lily urges rebellion and Communism, Ernestine and her younger sister Ermina have to chart their own courses to adulthood.

Nottage's play blends fantasy and reality, humor and pathos, the past and the future into a story about growing up and letting go.

Student and youth tickets are $6. Faculty, staff and community tickets are $12. All seating is general admission. Group prices are available, contact the box office for information. The house opens at 7 pm and we encourage audience members to arrive no later than 7:15 p.m. to ensure good seats. The balcony will serve as overflow and late seating. Call the Box Office in the Center for Art & Theatre at 912-478-5379 to make reservations. Reservation requests can be left on box office voicemail 24-hours a day. You can also purchase tickets online at Theatre & Performance Marketplace or by emailing us at theatre@georgiasouthern.edu.

No show on Monday, Sept. 26

Campus Farmers Market

The University Wellness Program & the Center for Sustainability have partnered with the Mainstreet Statesboro Farmers Market to bring the market to campus! Local farmers provide fresh produce, baked goods, honey, meat, dairy products and fair trade coffee. These farmers/vendors use environmentally sustainable practices including fewer pesticides, no antibiotics or growth hormones, and no preservatives. Stop by before or after class to meet new people, grab lunch, learn something new, try free samples, or to pick up a free giveaway! Cash, credit card, debit, Eagle Express, and EBT are accepted!

Low Alquist Exhibition

The Georgia Southern University Betty Foy Sanders Department of Art will present work by the late sculptor Lew Alquist from Sept. 28 - Oct. 28 in the Contemporary and University Galleries at the Center for Art and Theatre.

Alquist incorporated found objects, kinetic energy, sound, and scent into his work—provoking the senses to make the invisible more visible. His work primarily examines similarities, parallels, overlaps, and adjacencies between technological development and human evolution, but it also points to issues of political and industrial corruption as relevant today as when the work was created, in the 1970s-1990s.

“Discovering Alquist’s work has been a great surprise, like discovering a rich, dense novel that reveals crucial things you didn’t know you needed to know about,” said Gallery Director Jason Hoelscher. “Not as well-known as he should have been, Lew seems to have been something of an artist’s artist, known mainly to the cognoscenti. His work manages to touch on important political events of the time, while also offering intriguingly idiosyncratic (and often hilarious) new viewpoints from which to consider the art world of his era, ranging from postminimal materiality to art-as-technology and technology-as-art. With this exhibition we really hope to introduce Lew’s work to a larger, contemporary audience—not only is the work itself top-notch and provocative, but his statement that ‘Not everything is art, but everything is art supplies’ deserves to be right up there in the pantheon with any other profound phrase about art’s inherent potentials.”

A presentation on Alquist’s work will be given during an Artist Talk on Friday, Sept. 30 at 5 p.m. in Visual Art Building, Room 2071. A reception will follow from 6-7:30 p.m. in the Center for Art & Theatre. All events are free and open to the public.

Alquist’s wife Jane Pleak, who taught ceramics at Georgia Southern for nearly 30 years, curated the exhibition.

Future Georgia Educators Day at Georgia Southern

The Professional Association of Georgia Educators (PAGE) and the members of Future Georgia Educators (FGE) cordially invite all Education Pathway (ECE and TAP) classes to attend one of our "FGE Days" to be hosted at various colleges across the state.

PAGE and FGE have partnered with these colleges to offer young people interested in an education career the chance to meet teacher candidates and find out first hand what life as a college education major is really like.

FGE Day provides participants with a variety of opportunities including interactive workshops led by college faculty and teacher candidates, sessions with award-winning educators and an opportunity for participants to visit with college representatives throughout Georgia.

Georgia Southern University's FGE Day will take place on Wednesday, September 28 at Nessmith Lane Conference Center. Registration ends on September 16 and is $10 per person.
